EL AL PUTS ITS PLANES INTO STORAGE

By MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

From today El Al will sell no more tickets nor accept any reservations, and its planes are to be prepared for long-term storage, the airline's board of directors decided at an emergency meeting last night.

This decision followed the airline management's earlier recommendation to lock-out the company. El Al managing-director Yitzhak Shandar said he did not know when or how the company would operate again in the future. He said the board of directors was fully supported by the government and will not resume operations until the airline's striking stewards resume work unconditionally.

Yesterday morning, El Al's board informed its workers that it intended to operate the airline's flights without the striking stewards. The board then said that if the works committees prevent the flights, the board would issue orders to halt the airline entirely.

At about 3 p.m. the airline's mechanics began preparing a 707 plane for a flight to Paris. Temporary stewards hired by El Al were on board. But dozens of regular stewards surrounded the aircraft, sat near its wheels, and prevented it from moving.

At this point, managing director Yitzhak Shander issued the above orders, which mean the end of El Al in its present form. The board stated that it will fulfill its commitments to present ticket-holders, presumably by arranging transportation on other carriers.

Works committee spokesman Gabi Saltzman said yesterday that the workers are not striking, except for the stewards, who refuse to board planes until the management retracts 11 letters of dismissal issued during the week.

"We were quite ready to prepare the planes for take off, but the stewards blocked the way," Saltzman said. "We are not striking and want El Al to operate, but it is not our duty to remove the stewards bodily from the runway. That is the management's job."

Saltzman said that the board sees the closure of El Al as the only way of getting out of the mess caused by the government's decision to ground the airline on Saturdays and holydays. He accused the management of using the dismissals of the stewards to provoke them into a strike, and thus to provide the mangement with an excuse to close the airline.

The company announced last night that all El Al employees who were not needed for storing the planes or general maintenance will be sent on indefinate unpaid leave.

The attorney-general yesterday replied to the High Court of Justice's injunction of two weeks ago that El Al should continue flying on Saturdays and holydays for at least 45 days. The injunction was issued at the request of El Al's workers and two attorneys, who claimed that the government's decision to stop Sabbath flights was invalid and irrelevant.

The attorney-general's response included a statement from cabinet secretary Dan Meridor. Meridor noted that El Al did not fly on Saturdays in its first years of existence, and later only did so in special cases, without a government decision. These deviations from the norm aroused public storm until, in 1969, then transport minister Moshe Carmel announced that "no regular flights will take place on Saturday unless there is a security reason for it."

The statement was accompanied by a declaration of the Knesset Finance Committee's secretary, to the effect that the way in which the committee ratified the decision to close El Al on Saturdays was acceptable, because in January 1972 the Knesset committee decided that if a committee member is absent, he may be replaced by another member of his faction.

Fatah men held in IDF clampdown

BEIRUT. — The IDF consolidated its hold on West Beirut yesterday, with all key objectives reported captured and all refugee camps encircled. But sporadic shelling and rifle fire continued well into the evening, indicating that the IDF was still encountering some resistance from the remaining leftist militias and terrorists in the city.

According to an IDF report, the resistance appeared to be coming mainly from the Palestinian sectors of Sabra, Chatilla, Bourj el-Barajneh and Fakhani.

At the southwestern corner of a pine forest separating East and West Beirut, huge flames were shooting into the sky at dusk. Apparently IDF artillery has scored direct hits on enemy ammunition dumps.

At least 10 Israeli troops were wounded in the fighting, but as of last night no fatalities had been announced.

The IDF did state that among the prisoners taken during yesterday's fighting were a number clearly identified as Fatah terrorists who had remained under cover in the city following the PLO evacuation earlier this month.

The battle over West Beirut, which began shortly after President-elect Bashir Jemayel was killed in a bombing on Tuesday, raged through Wednesday night.

IDF to pull out 'as soon as Lebanese army able to take over'

Angry U.S. says incursion is breach of cease-fire

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. —. The Reagan administration yesterday bluntly told Israel to remove its military forces from West Beirut.

"There is no justification in our view for Israel's continued military presence in West Beirut and we call for an immediate pullback," the White House and the State Department said in identical statements.

That sharp protest was conveyed earlier in the day to Israeli Ambassador Moshe Arens, who was summoned to the State Department by Under Secretary for Political Affairs Lawrence Eagleburger.

On Wednesday night, Secretary of State George Shultz complained to Arens about the Israeli military move, although in milder terms. U.S. officials said Shultz personally would have delivered the protest to Arens, but he was preoccupied by the visit of Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos.

The carefully drafted U.S. statement accused Israel of violating its earlier commitments to the U.S. not to enter the western portion of the Lebanese capital.

"It appears from press reports and eyewitness accounts that the Israelis have now moved into strategic positions throughout West Beirut and control much of that sector of the city," the statement said. It was simultaneously read to

PLO gunmen brawl in Rome parliament

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

ROME. — Yasser Arafat's royal treatment on his current visit to Rome — the showy receptions he has received by the president, the foreign minister and the pope — yesterday was marred by a brawl between the PLO chief's armed bodyguards and police guarding the parliament building.

Italian newspapers described the melee as "a scene from an old-style western," when 15 gun-wielding Palestinians surrounding Arafat tried to force their way into the hall through police lines. Several fist fights broke out, resulting in torn police uniforms, before a number of the PLO men were permitted to enter after depositing their arms.

During Arafat's speech to parliament, a Republican Party member walked out. Social Democrat Constantino Belluscio submitted a parliamentary question over "armed foreigners being permitted to circulate freely in Italy."

Cabinet bitter over U.S. charge

By DAVID LANDAU
Post Diplomatic Correspondent

The cabinet announced close to midnight last night that Israeli forces would leave West Beirut as soon as the Lebanese Army "is ready to assume control of the area." The decision, taken at a special evening session of the cabinet, was designed to accede, in part at least, to insistent American demands that the Israel Defence Forces pull out of West Beirut.

Defence sources told The Jerusalem Post that the IDF was anxious to withdraw as soon as the Lebanese Army could take-over. "If they come and say they can takeover tomorrow, we will withdraw tomorrow. That is what (Defence Minister Ariel Sharon) told (U.S. mediator) Morris Draper this afternoon."

The cabinet decision itself, which was taken unanimously, spoke of the Lebanese Army assuming control of West Beirut "in coordination with the IDF."

Cabinet secretary Dan Meridor said Israel hopes the handover would be "as soon as possible. The sooner the better."

There was bitter resentment at the cabinet over the public accusations by Washington that Israel had broken its word by going into West Beirut. Ministers spoke of American "double talk." They felt there was a deliberate desire in Washington to clash with Israel and humilitate it publicly.

But it was decided not to give expression to these feelings in the official statement, which was couched in positive terms, stressing Israel's readiness to withdraw from West Beirut.

The cabinet statement said that the IDF had taken positions in West Beirut in the wake of president-elect Bashir Jemayel's assassination to prevent the danger of violence, bloodshed and anarchy." The cabinet spoke of 2,000 PLO terrorists who had remained in the city in "blatant violation of the departure agreement."

The dangers posed by the situation had "indeed been averted" by the IDF's prompt action, the cabinet declared.

The firm American position, published by the administration in advance of the Israeli cabinet meeting, seemed to come as a rude surprise to some Israeli officials who had earlier felt that the U.S. "understood" Israel's military actions in West Beirut.

These officials had advised

Amin Jemayel is picked as his brother's successor

and agencies

The Phalange party of assassinated Lebanese president-elect Bashir Jemayel has apparently chosen his elder brother, Amin, as its candidate for the presidency.

According to the party's official Voice of Lebanon radio station, politbureau leaders Edmonde Rizk and George Sa'ade had informed outgoing President Elias Sarkis of the decision.

The two then asked former president Camille Chamoun, the octogenarian leader of the overall Christian Lebanese Front alliance, to convene a meeting to endorse the new candidate, the radio said.

Speaking to reporters after meeting Chamoun, Rizk is quoted as saying: "The party has given Lebanon Bashir, and is now giving

Lebanon assails Israel's move

BEIRUT (AP). — The Lebanese government yesterday charged that Israel double-crossed the U.S., France and Italy by invading West Beirut shortly after their peacekeeping forces withdrew from the Moslem-populated half of the city.

Moslem Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan and Christian Foreign Minister Fuad Butros called on the U.S. to prove the credibility of its guarantees by making Israel withdraw its forces from Beirut "at once."

Both said in separate statements that the U.S. has given "numerous assurances and guarantees" that Israeli forces would refrain from entering West Beirut once Palestinian terrorists were evacuated from the city.

The statements rejected as "untrue and irrelevant" Israeli claims that it was invading West Beirut to prevent instability in the wake of president-elect Bashir Jemayel's assassination on Tuesday.

At the UN, Security Council members were expected to convene by this morning in response to the Lebanese demand for an urgent meeting to discuss the recent Israeli moves into West Beirut. Ghassan Tueni, the Lebanese ambassador, met yesterday with the council's president, Masahiro Nisibori of Japan, to deliver the request.

Bazooka fire in Bekaa

METULLA. — Terrorists in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley last night fired a number of bazooka rounds at Israel positions in the area of Kafr Amik in the eastern sector. The IDF returned fire. This was the first violation of the cease-fire by the terrorists since Monday. No casualties were reported.

Lebanese refugees are still unprepared for the winter

By CHARLES HOFFMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

With the winter rains about two months away, nothing has been done yet to remove the rubble from the damaged Palestinian refugee camps in South Lebanon and get the sites ready for the tents needed for about 60,000 people.

Officials of the Joint Distribution Committee who toured three of the worst-hit refugee camps near Tyre and Sidon earlier this week told The Jerusalem Post that none of the debris had been clared. They said that UNRWA, which administers the camps, claims that it lacks money to do the jobs of clearing and site-preparation, which is expected to cost several million dollars.

Dr. David Harman, chief scientist of the JDC-Israel, said tearing down damaged buildings and hauling away the debris is only part of the job. Before the tents are put up, water, sewage and electricity lines must be repaired or rebuilt. Concrete floors will also be needed for the tents.

The officials of the American and Israeli sections of the JDC toured the camps to assess the residents' needs for the winter. The American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee has provided several hundred thousand dollars in relief aid to South Lebanon, and has offered to provide heating stoves and blankets for the winter.

Over a month ago, UNRWA was informed by the Israeli authorities that accommodations for the refugees whose homes were destroyed in the fighting would have to be limited to tents.

Minister of Economic Coordination Ya'acov Meridor explained several weeks ago that the Lebanese government had insisted that no permanent materials or prefabricated housing be put up in the damaged camps. The Lebanese, he said, also rejected an Israeli plan to break up the camps in the south and to resettle the refugees further north. This made tent camps in the UNRWA-controlled areas the only possible solution, Meridor said.

UNRWA has reportedly ordered 13,700 tents, which are scheduled to arrive in Haifa from Larnaca next week. According to UNRWA estimates, these tents can house over 60,000 people. An earlier UNRWA estimate of the homeless refugees in the south was 40,000 —

Halpert, 72, was leader of the Satmar community and kashrut supervisor for Transylvania for 22 years. He had come to Israel several times to visit his daughter who is married to Moshe Tirrer, Agudat Yisrael secretary in Haifa.

During the Holocaust, Halpert was deported to Auschwitz, where his wife and seven children perished.

In Ramat Vizhnitz, in Haifa, where Halpert will settle, he was welcomed by the Vizhnitz Rebbe and his followers.

Begin: terrorists cheated both us and Habib

By MARK SEGAL
Post Political Correspondent

TEL AVIV. — Prime Minister Menachem Begin yesterday defended the IDF's moves into West Beirut, declaring: "The terrorists cheated us. Not all of them got out. They deceived Philip Habib too. They left behind a considerable number of terrorists together with their arms, as we have learned during the past two nights."

Begin was addressing the Liberal Party central committee here. In discussing the development of the war in Lebanon, he argued that had the PLO accepted Israel's offer on June 11 for an end to the fighting "then all that suffering would have been avoided. So many tragedies would have been prevented."

Begin then proceeded to call on the people of Lebanon to quickly set up an independent government that would unify their troubled land. He reassured the Lebanese: "We don't want an inch of your territory. We are ready to leave together with all other foreign forces. We can leave speedily."

The premier said that there was only one word fit to describe the meeting between the pope and the "blood-stained" terrorist Yasser Arafat — "disgust." He said he was horror-stricken that "all those professors, ministers and members of parliament" gave Arafat a standing ovation at the Inter-Parliamentary Union Congress in Rome.

"They heard him charge Israel and the United States with the death of Bashir Jemayel, yet not one stepped forward and cried: 'How dare you tell such a big lie?' But none did that. They cheered him. It's evocative of the 1930s, when the professors and the ministers applauded other killers," Begin said.

Arafat can travel around the world, Begin said, "but the fact will remain that tens of thousands of these bloodthirsty terrorists have been scattered throughout many countries. That's what matters."

He said there may be more terrorist acts in London and Paris, "but we have assured security for Israel."

The premier reiterated his total rejection of President Ronald Reagan's proposals, arguing "if Britain's Iron Lady Margaret Thatcher, France and West Germany can stand firmly against American proposals on the gas pipe-line, why can't we protect what we consider as life-and-death issues?"

He warned that the Reagan plan would bring Arafat and the PLO within shelling distance of the Coastal Plain: "Tel Aviv and Rishon Lezion will suffer the fate of Kiryat Shmona and Nahariya before Operation Peace for Galilee," he said.

Begin took the Labour Alignment to task for welcoming the Reagan plan. "It does not contain the Jordanian option but an anti-Israel option," he charged.

Begin said King Hussein at the Fez conference had reconfirmed that he would let Arafat and the PLO take over the projected Palestinian state that the Arabs planned for the West Bank and Gaza.

Begin also said: "We saved 600,000 Israelis from an atomic holocaust by bombing the Baghdad reactor before the Iraqi tyrant could get it working."

The Vatican yesterday responded to earlier Israeli criticism of the pope's meeting with the PLO chief.

Don Pierfranco Pastore, deputy director of the Vatican press office told reporters, "We trust that the speech pronounced by the pope at the end of yesterday's general audience and the communique released by this press office last night will serve to rectify the evaluations expressed in a communique issued by the spokesman of the Israeli Foreign Ministry on the significance and content of Pope John Paul II's meeting with Mr. Arafat."

Vatican sources recalled that the statement issued by the Vatican late Wednesday explained that the pope's decision to meet Arafat was dictated "by his constant concern to assist the painful process of peace in the Middle East."

In a similar retort to Israel on Monday, a Vatican communique denounced an Israeli charge that the Vatican did nothing to help Jews during World War II as "an outrage to the truth."

IDF IN BEIRUT

end of Corniche Mazraa. The militias then moved to a nearby building and continued shooting rocket-propelled grenades and light arms fire. The Israelis returned fire, but one commander said he did not know if they had killed the attackers or whether they had simply left. After sun-rise fire resumed from another site and seven of the enemy were killed. The army then occupied the entire area.

Shortly after dawn Israel Air Force jets encircled and then crossed over Beirut, apparently to photograph the area, as troops moved to mop up the resistance.

As the IDF advanced, the enemy occasionally fired first from windows and street corners. The IDF replied with automatic fire, RPGs and low anti-tank rockets. In more serious cases they called foward Merkava tanks, which blasted the enemy position.

Resistance was particularly strong under the Fuad Shahab Bridge and at the stadium, but soldiers said that on the whole resistance was limited to RPGs and light arms fire. According to Israeli estimates, the leftist Moslem militias and the PLO have some 2,500 men in West Beirut.

During one hour yesterday morning some 10 injured IDF soliders were rushed to a first-aid station at the port. One had suffered an eye injury and another had been more seriously hurt. A senior officer decided it was too risky to land a helicopter there and an ambulance raced with blaring siren to bring the seriously wounded out of the area to another spot from which they were airlifted to hospital.

Phalangists said responsible for slaying of two in Sidon

By MENAHEM HOROWITZ and YOEL DAR
Jerusalem Post Reporters

METULLA. — Two Lebanese residents of Sidon were allegedly murdered Wednesday by soldiers of the Christian Phalange, during a curfew imposed that day by the Israel Defence Forces. They were killed shortly after president-elect Bashir Jemayel's funeral.

The exact circumstances of the incident remain unclear, but sources in Sidon say that Jemayel's assassination has spread fears among Sidon's Moslems of possible retaliation by the Phalangists. The IDF curfew was reportedly imposed to prevent such acts of vengeance.

The curfew brought life to a standstill in the western part of South Lebanon and along the coastal road linking Najoura village with North Lebanon.

All shops and markets were closed yesterday and farmers stopped cultivating their fields and orchards. Sidon and Tyre looked deserted except for their commercial centres which were full of Major Sa'ad Haddad's militiamen and Phalangist soldiers.

The IDF set up roadblocks at highway intersections and bridges, and checked documents of the few vehicles on the road. Lebanese who work in Nahariya remained at home and for the second consecutive day Lebanese merchants could not cross the border.

In contrast with the western sector, many Lebanese workers from the east yesterday reached their jobs in Galilee as usual. Near Kafr Jezin in South Lebanon two local alleged terrorist sympathizers were injured when they attempted to break through a roadblock set up by Haddad's soldiers.

Residents of South Lebanon reacted with great apprehension to rumours of the possible succession of Bashir Jemayel by his brother Amin, 40. Amin Jemayel is known for his close ties with Israel and it is feared his election might result in an attack against Israel in Lebanon.

"Pierre Jemayel split his family, Bashir for Israel and Amin for Syria. The family was insured," said a Christian military source in South Lebanon yesterday.

The source pointed out that, contrary to Bashir's election — when many parliamentary deputies residing in Syrian-occupied Lebanon were prevented from reaching Beirut to take part in the vote — Jemayel would probably be assured a quorum.

To ease the situation in the south, the IDF authorities lifted the curfew for three hours to enable residents to purchase necessities. Local residents who crossed the border said the situation reminded them of the first days of Operation Peace for Galilee.

Unofficial sources claimed that Israeli authorities took advantage of the new situation to pursue several PLO units which remain in the area and continue to harass the IDF. In the past six weeks, these units ambushed several military vehicles near Tyre, killing and wounding several soldiers.

Uhrbach bows out of Vatican conference

Prof. Ephraim Uhrbach, president of the Israel Academy of Sciences and Humanities, yesterday cancelled his planned participation in an international conference to be held at the Vatican this month to protest Pope John Paul II's granting of a private audience to PLO chief Yasser Arafat on Wednesday.

Uhrbach wrote in a letter to Prof. Carlos Chagas, president of the Academia Pontificia Vaticana, that "the reception of Yasser Arafat by the pope makes it impossible for me to attend the Conference of Presidents of Academies." The conference is scheduled to be held in Rome on September 23 and 24.

"It is to be deeply regretted that the reception granted to this man by the pope contradicts the intention and defeats the lofty aims of the planned meeting and the moral impact of a conference called to avert the threat of war and particularly of nuclear conflagration," Uhrbach said.

Funerals held for two killed in Beirut

Two Israeli soldiers who were killed on Wednesday when the IDF moved into West Beirut were buried yesterday.

Segen (Lieutenant) Nitzan Barak, 22, was laid to rest in the Kiryat Shaul military cemetery. Barak grew up in Kiron, where he studied electronics in the ORT high school. After his release from the army, he volunteered for an additional year of service as a paratrooper. Many of his friends and fellow soldiers attended the funeral. Barak is survived by his parents, a brother and a sister.

Segen-Mishne (Second Lieutenant) Yisrael (Roli) Bachar, 20, was buried in the Haifa military cemetery near Carmel Beach. He was born in Kiryat Haim, and studied at the yeshiva high school in Kiryat Shmuel. Last Friday, Bachar called his parents from Lebanon and said he would be coming home for Rosh Hashana.

Hitchhiking soldier commandeers car

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — A soldier who commandeered a car at gunpoint from a woman driver surrendered last night after several hours of tense negotiations with police.

In the second such incident reported this week, a woman gave a lift to a hitchhiking soldier and was forced to abandon her car.

The woman picked up the soldier on Haifa's Mount Carmel at 5:30 p.m. and proceeded north on the coastal road, where she was ordered out of the car.

She summoned police, who stopped the car at a roadblock at the Kiryat Ata junction. Police negotiators tried to persuade the soldier to give himself up, but he refused to surrender and fired several shots in the air.

He finally agreed to abandon the car at 10:20 last night and was immediately taken into custody.

Ministry to enter Hagalil school row

By MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The parents of the pupils of Neve Zahal's Hagalil school, who have prevented studies from being held there since the opening of the school year two weeks ago, are to meet with Education Ministry Director-General Eliezer Shmueli on Monday in a further attempt to settle the dispute between the parents and the Tel Aviv municipality. Some of the parents, however, are reportedly against Shmueli being an arbitrator in the issue.

Pupils entered the school yesterday, but again refused to go into their classrooms and study. They had been instructed by their parents not to study until the city retracts its decision to transfer Neve Zahal's first-graders to the Hatikva Quarter, and to transfer Neve Barbour's first-graders to the Hagalil school, which Neve Zahal residents regard as their neighbourhood school.

Commenting on reports that the Education Ministry had threatened to close the Hagalil school if studies there continue to be disrupted, central Tel Aviv parents committee representative Moshe Mizrahi said yesterday that if the Hagalil school is closed, the parents will stop all studies throughout Tel Aviv.

Egypt arrests Moslem extremists in coup plot

CAIRO (Reuter). — Egyptian security authorities have arrested a number of Moslem extremists for plotting the overthrow of President Hosni Mubarak's government, the official Middle East News Agency (MENA) said yesterday.

The agency quoted a statement by the attorney general as saying that the plot was planned by members of the outlawed Jihad (holy war) organization in cooperation with some unnamed foreign circles.

newsmen to take earlier American expressions of disapprobation more as a formality than as a true reflection of Washington's thinking.

Now, it was feared, the U.S. might support demands for Israeli withdrawal at the UN Security Council.

The sudden cold blast from Washington, which included allegations that Israel had not adhered to earlier agreements, was expected to exacerbate doubts that some ministers had expressed — anonymously — before the cabinet meeting about the wisdom of Israel's military moves.

There was also some resentment among ministers that the moves had been taken without any consultation with the full cabinet.

The orders to the army were issued during Wednesday night, following consultation between Premier Menachem Begin and Sharon.

Sharon said that the IDF had managed to take over all the key positions in West Beirut in 27 hours. He told a meeting of Defence Ministry staff in Tel Aviv that it had been necessary to move quickly to forestall the re-establishment of the terrorists in the western part of the city.

Sharon termed the decision to move into West Beirut "fateful." If the IDF had not moved, he said, Israel would have found itself facing problems it could not solve.

ORT director Max Braude is buried

Max Albert Braude, a member of the executive committee of World ORT and its director-general from 1956 to 1980, was buried at Jerusalem's Har Hamenuhot cemetery on Wednesday.

Braude was born in Harmony, Pennsylvania, on September 26, 1913. He graduated from the University of Pittsburgh in 1933 and was registrar at the Hebrew Theological College in Chicago until 1940. He was ordained there as a rabbi the following year and joined the U.S. Army. Braude, who became a lieut.-col., was later in charge of the welfare of displaced persons and Jewish refugees.

In 1947 Braude joined the International Refugee Oranization as chief of maintenance and care. In 1951 he settled in Switzerland, where he became a director of the ORT World Union, and in 1956 its director-general. It was due to his leadership that ORT reached 100,000 pupils in 20 countries.

Braude settled in Israel in 19[illegible]. He leaves a widow, Elinor, and two sisters. (A.Z.)

JEMAYEL

Lebanon Amin. Amin is the trustee of Bashir's mission."

UPI, in a late report from Beirut, quoted government sources as confirming that Amin had, in fact, been nominated.

Amin Jemayel, 40, a lawyer by training, is the only surviving son of Phalange party founder Pierre Jemayel.

A controversial figure who has lived largely in the shadow of his younger brother, Amin's capacity to carry out the Bashir's task is in some doubt.

In the first place, he is known to be much less enthusiastic than Bashir was concerning ties with Israel, and he is almost certain, if elected, to go out of his way to reduce these ties.

Secondly, unlike his brother, he has never been part of the Christian fighting establishment and has only the most tenuous ties with the Phalange-controlled Lebanese Forces, which Bashir had personally commanded and which were to have played an important part in consolidating his rule.

Amin is certainly in no position to command the Lebanese Forces, although he could conceivably be assured of their loyalty simply by virtue of the fact that he is Bashir Jemayel's brother.

Third, Amin is not a popular figure in the Christian political establishment. Chamoun in particular is believed to detest him, and there could be some difficulty in keeping the country's Christian alliance intact once the solidarity engendered by Bashir's assassination begins to wear off.

On the positive side, not having been personally involved in the bloody fighting that has torn Lebanon apart over the past eight years, Amin could be in a better position to achieve a national reconciliation between the country's Moslem and Christian factions.

According to agency reports from Beirut, Amin could not be reached for comment on reports that he had been nominated.

Meanwhile, Lebanese state- and privately-owned radio stations have reported that Parliament Speaker Kamel Assad had cut short a vacation in Europe and was on his way home to convene parliament to elect a new president before Sarkis's term expires this hursday.

Israel had played an important role in enabling parliament to convene a quorum last month to elect Bashir, which it did with the greatest of difficulty as most of the Moslem deputies stayed away.

Reconvening parliament to elect Amin could be no less difficult, although there is a possibility that some of the Moslem delegates who boycotted Bashir's election could be induced to vote for his elder brother.

Arafat asks return of multinational force

ROME. — PLO leader Yasser Arafat announced yesterday that he is urging the U.S., France and Italy to send their peacekeeping troops back to Beriut.

He said that the Israeli occupation of Beirut is a challenge to the "military honour" of these three western countries which contributed to the international force that supervised the withdrawal of terrorists from the Lebanese capital.

Speaking at a news conference winding up his two-day visit to Italy, Arafat said he had formally asked Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, when they met on Wednesday night, for the return of the multinational force. Colombo promised to pass on the request to Washington and Paris, he said.

Arafat spent yesterday in talks with the leaders of various political parties. In the morning he was feted at Rome's historic City Hall, where he likened himself to Saint Peter and said he wanted to enter the hearts of Romans as Peter did nearly 2,000 years ago. As Arafat talked to newsman, the Jews of Rome shut down their numerous shops in the heart of the city in protest against the red carpet treatment accorded him by the Italian government and the Pope. A demonstration took place outside the main synagogue, and the Chief Rabbi of Rome, Elio Toaff, sent a telegram to the Pope after Arafat's papal audience. (UPI, JTA)

Kuwait envoy slain in Spain

MADRID. — A man claiming to be a Palestinian member of the Abu Nidal terrorist group shot a Kuwaiti diplomat dead with a silencer-fitted pistol in downtown Madrid yesterday, police said.

Kuwaiti First Secretary Najeeb Sayed al-Refai died in the attack, and his driver, Guillermo Martin, was wounded in the assault which took place as the envoy was entering the embassy limousine outside the mission.

The attacker told police his name is Ibrahim Nasir Hamdan. Hamdan, 28, said he was born in Sidon, Lebanon.

The Abu Nidal group was linked to the massacre in a Jewish restaurant in Paris earlier this summer, when terrorists gunned down guests.

In Karachi, Pakistan, Kuwait's acting consul general, Hamad I-Jutaili, was wounded yesterday in an attack by an unidentified gunman who fired three pistol shots at his car near the Kuwaiti consulate and escaped.

Police say they do not know if the attack was linked to a recent spate of what the authorities called terrorist activity by terrorist groups wanting to overthrow president Mohammad Zia-l-Haq's military government. (UPI, Reuter)

Jews to greet New Year at home and at the front

By HAIM SHAPIRO
Jerusalem Post Reporter

As Israelis gather tonight to usher in the New Year, the thoughts of many will be with friends and relatives serving in Lebanon.

In addition to preparations for Rosh Hashana for soldiers in the field, Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren has also made efforts through the International Red Cross in Geneva to provide a shofar, prayer books and prayer shawls to the nine Israeli soldiers being held prisoner by the PLO in Syria.

All the soldiers in camps and outposts will be able to celebrate the holiday, pray and eat the traditional dishes of Rosh Hashana, the IDF chief rabbi, Aluf Gad Navon, told The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

Rabbi Navon said that they had compiled special short prayers for soldiers who must be busy in security activities during the holiday. He said that with so many soldiers in Lebanon this year during the high holidays, a number of logistic and religious law problems had arisen, but by yesterday all of them had been solved.

One of the problems was that in Israel holidays like Succot and Simhat Torah are celebrated only one day, while outside of Israel they are two days each. Navon ruled that since the soldiers are in Lebanon on a temporary mission ordered by the government, they will celebrate those holidays only one day.

In his traditional blessing to all the soldiers for the New Year Navon stated that again the IDF had to go out and protect Israel against terrorists who wanted to destroy the country. He said that this war was a holy war to protect Israel.

The Jews of Lebanon this year will have their services and kosher food arranged by the IDF Chaplaincy Corps. Sephardi Chief Rabbi Ovadia Yosef has sent emissaries to Cairo and Alexandria to slaughter kosher meat and to lead prayers in the two cities.

The two-day holiday, which marks the beginning of 5743, begins at sundown tonight and ends on Sunday evening. Many will celebrate by attending synagogue services and listening to the shofar blast which, because the first day of the holiday falls on Shabbat, will be sounded only on Sunday.

The fact that the first day is the Sabbath will also mean that the traditional tashlich ceremony, in which observant Jews symbolically throw their sins into the water, is postponed to the second day of Rosh Hashana.

Thousands of synagogues have been readied for the holiday, in addition to hundreds of temporary prayer centres. Special arrangements have been made to provide synagogues for new immigrants, who have also been given prayer books, ritual objects and explanatory booklets in their native languages.

Prices for seats at the larger synagogues have jumped this year. The new Great Synagogue in Jerusalem will cost a worshipper IS1,500. But in smaller synagogues, seats cost far less or nothing for regular worshippers and even in the large places of worship, no one is turned away.

Others will spend the holiday at the beach or on picnics, with balmy weather promised.

Hotels in the resort areas are almost completely filled for Rosh Hashana, mainly with Israelis who are enjoying the substantial discounts offered this year, but hotels in Jerusalem report large-scale vacancies for the holiday.

Paving of the lower end of the Street of the Chain in Jerusalem's Old City has been completed in time for Rosh Hashana by employees of the East Jerusalem Development Corporation working round the clock in recent days.

In addition to serving Jewish worshippers on the way to the Western Wall, the street also provides entry to the Temple Mount via the Chain Gate. A square in front of the gate has also been paved in the same operation so as to be ready for the Moslem Id el-Adha feast later in the month.

Police warn the public to be on the lookout for suspicious-looking objects. Civil Defence volunteers are to take turns as guards during synagogue services. The police have also called for motorists to take special care so as not to ruin the holiday.

Navon hopes for 'boring,' peaceful year

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

At his annual Rosh Hashana reception for the foreign diplomatic corps yesterday, President Yitzhak Navon said he hopes an ambassador from Lebanon would take part next year and that the coming year will be a "boring" one with fewer headlines about Israel.

Navon said the two most important events of 5742 were Israel's withdrawal from Sinai and the Lebanon war. He hopes that the "clouds that have been covering the sky" in relations with Egypt would soon dissipate and that peace would prevail in Lebanon, which he called a "beautiful but suffering country."

The president was presented with a message from President Ronald Reagan by U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis, in which the U.S. head of state wished all the house of Israel an inscription in the Book of Life for 5743. Reagan said he looked forward to a year of progress towards peace, "which Israel so much deserves."

Reagan added that he expects to see Navon in Washington "in the late fall." The exact date for Navon's state visit has not yet been set.

Lewis, who with five-and-a-half years here is the dean of the foreign diplomatic corps, wished the president and all of Israel a Shana Tova. The ambassador noted that Israel has taken steps to advance peace in the past year, and that "the pursuit of peace is a goal of all of us."

Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Deputy Minister Yehuda Ben-Meir and other ministry officials were also there to accept New Year's greeting from the ambassadors.

Eitan calls Lebanon war 'just, essential'

Jerusalem Post Staff

Israel launched Operation Peace for Galilee "with faith in its justness, out of a sense of duty and because of the imperative of fulfilling national goals," Chief of Staff Rav-Aluf Rafael Eitan says in his Rosh Hashana 5743 greetings to the troops.

Calling the operation "the central event in the country's life this year," Eitan cited its objectives as: assuring normal life for Galilee settlements; destroying the military infrastructure of the terrorist organizations; driving off and preventing a threat to the country's security; and furthering the cause of peace in the region.

He noted that careful preparation throughout the Israel Defence Forces was responsible for the success of the war in Lebanon. Eitan particularly praised the level of command and fighting ability of the troops, whom he also commended for their fidelity to the IDF code of purity of arms.

Eitan also reviewed the IDF's withdrawal from Sinai, which was completed during the past year. The pullout had been accomplished faithfully, speedily and without impairing the country's security, Eitan said. He pledged that the IDF is "ready in its new deployment to carry out its tasks and objectives."

Port pilot sanctions cause long docking delays

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Pilots at Israel's three main ports are continuing their week-old work-to-rule sanctions, causing long delays for some larger vessels.

Earlier this week one ship, the American-owned Lash Italia, was kept waiting outside Haifa Port for three days before it left without unloading its 80 containers of general cargo, a port spokesman said yesterday. But passenger ships are not affected, he added.

The pilots, whose work is vital for the safe docking and undocking of vessels, began their sanctions last Friday in protest over delays in negotiating a new labour agreement.

The previous agreement expired last March.

Rabid dog killed after biting man

Jerusalem Post Reporter

A resident of Moshav Tomer in the Jordan Rift Valley was bitten by a stray dog that was killed and found to be rabid, the Health Ministry announced on Wednesday.

The chief doctor of the ministry's Jerusalem district said that the person who was bitten was receiving appropriate treatment, and said that anyone who believes that they were bitten by the dog should report at once to their local health office.

The ministry recommended to the veterinary service to kill all stray dogs in the area and those animals which had contact with the rabid dog.

JERUSALEM POST POLL

War hurt Israel's image

By MARK SEGAL
Post Political Correspondent

TEL AVIV. — Most Israelis believe that the war in Lebanon has lowered Israel's standing in the world, according to the latest Jerusalem Post poll. Even Likud supporters are unhappy with Israel's international image, and a large majority — irrespective of party affiliation — favour the establishment of a special information agency.

On the other hand two-thirds of the public say they are satisfied with the government's general performance, with a clear divergence of positions according to party sympathies.

The poll was conducted by the Modi'in Ez-rachi Institute at the end of August among a representative sample of 1,937 adults.

Q. How do you perceive Israel's image in Europe and the U.S.?

	All respondents	Pro-Likud	Pro-Labour
1. Very good	2.8	3.5	1.2
2. Good	12.2	17.4	6.7
3. Not so good	32.4	38.6	23.5
4. Not good	21.3	20.3	21.4
5. Bad	28.4	16.9	45.9
6. Undecided	2.9	3.2	1.3

Institute director Dr. Sara Shemer pointed out that half the public considers Israel's image to be either "not good" or "bad." The feeling of unease also is reflected among Likud supporters, with the pro-Labour camp's dissatisfaction even more pronounced.

Q. "In your opinion did the war in Lebanon improve or lower Israel's standing in the Free World?"

	August poll	June poll
Improved	25.2	33.2
No change	17.4	26.0
Lowered	54.3	37.6
Undecided	3.1	3.2

The question: "Should we establish a special information agency?" received a positive reaction from 84.7 per cent of the public.

Government and opposition supporters parted ways on the question of the government's general performance:

Q. What do you think of the government's general performance?"

	All respondents	Pro-Likud	Pro-Labour
Very good	21.4	34.7	4.3
Good	44.6	53.5	26.6
Not so good	21.6	9.1	39.4
Bad	9.6	0.9	26.6
Undecided	2.8	1.8	3.1

Corfu: Education key to road safety

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

LOD. — It is not roads or automobiles but drivers who cause road accidents, Minister of Transport Haim Corfu said on Wednesday night.

Corfu was speaking at an awards ceremony of the National Council for the Prevention of Road Accidents honouring cautious drivers.

The Jerusalem Post received a medal and special citation for its aid in the battle against road accidents by printing special road safety advertisements. Avraham Levin, the head of The Post's advertising department, received the award on behalf of the paper.

Corfu praised the council for its activities. He said that since the human being is the main cause of road accidents, the educational campaigns of the council contributed much to improve dirvers' skills and thus prevent accidents.

He also stated that his ministry would do everything possible to improve the country's roads to make them safer and to perform more careful safety checks on all automobiles.

Soviet Jewry activists to plan next moves

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The presidium of the Brussels Conference on Soviet Jewry will meet in Jerusalem on October 24, the same day as the 1,000-participant conference was to have convened in France.

The 40-member presidium, headed by Jewish Agency Executive chairman Arye Dulzin, will decide when and where to hold the conference, which aims at increasing pressure on the Soviet Union to issue more exit permits for Israel.

The conference was postponed, because it was felt that with world public opinion focused on the war in Lebanon and its aftermath, little attention would be paid to the conference. Dulzin wants the conference to be held no later than the spring.

REFUGEES

or two-thirds of the refugees who lived in the camps before the war. Some of the tents may be used to house Palestinians from Beirut whose homes were destroyed in the recent fighting there.

UNRWA officials could not be reached for comment on the organizations's current shortage of funds. A recent UNRWA announcement said that only about $12 million had been raised in a special fund drive aimed at collecting $39m. for emergency aid to the refugees in Lebanon. UNRWA has appealed to three European governments to pay for getting the camps ready for winter, according to the JDC sources.

Foreign Ministry officials who deal with UNRWA on a regular basis said that UNRWA has on principle not asked the Israeli government to pay for preparing the camps in South Lebanon for tents. The government they said, has offered to truck the tents from Haifa, but was unable to meet an UNRWA request to have IDF earth-moving equipment clear away rubble. The IDF, according to ministry sources, is unable to spare the equipment at this time.

The sources added that it is not certain whether UNRWA plans to build concrete floors for the tents, and may suffice with a layer of gravel over the ground.

The three camps hit hardest in the fighting with the terrorists in the south were Ein Hilwe near Sidon, which according to UNRWA formerly housed about 25,000 people and was almost completely destroyed; Rashidiya near Tyre, which formerly had 14,000 residents and was heavily damaged; and El-Buss near Tyre, with 5,000 residents, which was partially destroyed. Three other smaller refugee camps in the south suffered little or no damage.

Ghotbzadeh executed for planning revolt

The former Iranian minister was shot on Wednesday. (Keystone)

LONDON. — Former Iranian foreign minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh was executed by firing squad for masterminding a plot to overthrow the regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency said yesterday.

Ghotbzadeh, 46, was put to death late Wednesday after the High Judicial Court approved a death sentence imposed by the Military Revolutionary Tribunal, the agency said. He was arrested April 8.

Exiled oppostion leader Massoud Rajavi in a statement denounced Ghotbzadeh's execution as "clearly expressive of the limitless savagery of a regime which does not even refrain from sacrificing its own closest colleagues."

The Paris-based chief of the Mujahedin Khalq guerrilla organization said the Iranian regime ignored appeals for clemency from unnamed Arab and West European governments.

Ghotbzadeh, who aided Khomeini's return from exile to triumph but fell from grace while seeking the release of the U.S. embassy hostages, was the fourth foreign minister of the Islamic republic. His two predecessors, Karim Sanjabi, and Ibrahim Yazdi are in hiding and a third, Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, who became president, escaped to France last year.

During his trial, Ghotbzadeh admitted having led a group that included monarchists who plotted to topple the Islamic government. But he denied charges that he planned to kill Khomeini by blowing up his north Theran house.

Iranian exile sources said he gave vital information to the court after his arrest and turned in 70 officers they said were later executed in connection with the plot.

Ghotbzadeh, 46, was virtually unknown in his country before the 1979 revolution. He served on the powerful Revolutionary Council, headed the national broadcasting network and became foreign minister after the seizure of the U.S. embassy in 1979. But he failed in his bid to become Iran's first president.

Iran's news agency said that Ghotbzadeh had links with the U.S. and that Saudi Arabian leaders had provided his group with cash to finance the plot.

The agency said Iran's second most senior ayatollah, Kazem Shariat-Madari, whose son-in-law was arrested with Ghotbzadeh, was to have given his blessing to the conspiracy.

Shariat-Madari was put under strict house arrest in the holy city of Qom after the discovery of the plot.

Meanwhile, 10 people were executed in Teheran on Wednesday for drug offences, a Teheran newspaper said yesterday.

The Islamic Republic described them as international smugglers. They were shot by a firing squad. (UPI, Reuter)

ASYLUM. — Four Iranian servicemen who competed in a recent international wrestling competition in Caracas have asked the Venezuelan government for political asylum, a spokesman for the Iranian Embassy in Caracas said on Tuesday.

Princess Grace 'suffered stroke' at wheel

MONTE CARLO (UPI). — Princess Grace of Monaco suffered a stroke while driving her car along a mountain road with her 17-year-old daughter Stephanie who tried in vain to stop the vehicle with a hand brake, according to the first doctor to examine the late princess after her fatal accident.

Dr. Jean Duplay, director of the neurological surgery department of the Central Hospital at Nice, said he discovered evidence that Grace, 52, suffered a "brain hemorrhage" and his diagnosis was confirmed by the results of a brain scan performed on the princess on Monday afternoon.

Stephanie, the youngest child of Grace and Prince Rainier, told her father she tried to pull the hand brake of the car, but was unsuccessful.

"It was definitely Grace who was driving," said Duplay, who examined both women within hours of the accident on Monday.

Duplay said his findings were also verified by Dr. Charles Louis Chatelaine, director of the hospital in Monaco named for Princess Grace.

There were reports, repeatedly denied by the royal palace, that Stephanie was driving, although at 17 she is too young to drive legally.

The funeral of the former film star Grace Kelly will be held tomorrow morning, a spokesman for the royal family said on Wednesday night.

Heads of state and entertainment figures from all over the world are expected to come here for the funeral, officials said.

Poland: We wanted to talk to Solidarity

WARSAW (UPI). — Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak told parliament yesterday that martial law authorities had been trying to hold talks with Solidarity underground leaders since April, but their offer had been ignored.

Kiszczak said the attempts to establish working contacts with the underground were made through Catholic church officials.

The Interior Ministry guaranteed safe conduct for Zbigniew Bujak, Bogdan Lis and Wladyslaw Frasyniuk, all top Solidarity leaders, but had received no response, he said.

"The last reaction to the call for talks was a provocation of street demonstrations," said Kiszczak.

He blamed the Solidarity leadership for the death last month of four workers during demonstrations in Lubin and Wroclaw because the organization had told the people "to turn to the streets."

Kiszczak said the demonstrations had occurred in 66 cities, and in 23 cities the police did not resort to force. He said the use of firearms by police had been justified.

Eighty-nine civilians were injured, 14 of them wounded by police. A total of 295 militiamen and five soldiers were also injured, he said.

In another development, Krzysztof Wyszkowski, managing editor of Solidarity's nationwide weekly newspaper, escaped from internment and is in hiding, informed sources said on Wednesday. The sources said he had been interned since martial law began last December 13.

Also in Warsaw, dissident leader Jan Jozef Lipski returned of his own will on Wednesday to face charges of seeking to overthrow the communist government.

Lipski, who had been in London for heart treatment since May, was greeted by about 100 well-wishers when he arrived on a regularly scheduled flight.

"I think the charges are pure absurdity," he told foreign correspondents on his arrival, "but my colleagues are in jail. How could I stay? I should be with them." (UPI, AP)

CHRYSLER. — The United Auto Workers union (UAW) said yesterday in Detroit that it had reached a tentative settlement with Chrysler Corporation on a new one-year contract, averting a strike.

Rudolf Hess, the last of the Nazi hierarchy being held in the four-power Spandau war crimes prison, was transferred in serious condition to a British military hospital in Berlin on Wednesday. Hess, 88, is suffering from pleurisy, which doctors fear may develop into pneumonia. The former deputy of Adolf Hitler, shown here in a 1946 file photo, was last hospitalized in April 1981 with pneumonia. (UPI telephoto)

Zambia-Zaire border row

LUSAKA (UPI). — Zairean troops have occupied a village 16 kilometres inside Zambia, officials said yesterday, in an apparent fresh outbreak of the border row between the two countries.

Alex Shapi, Zambian chairman of the Zambia-Zaire Joint Permanent Commission, said Zairean troops massed at Mwabu Kampamba in the Chiengi district of the northern Luapula province, east of Lake Mweru, on September 3 and hoisted the Zairean flag.

He said it was a repeat of a similar incident August 4. He did not say how many troops were involved.

Zambia has demanded the withdrawal of the troops and their flag at a meeting of representatives of the two countries in the southern Zaire town of Lubumbashi, officials said.

W. Germany steps up hunt for terrorist

WIESBADEN, West Germany (UPI). — West German police yesterday began an intensive search for Christian Klar, 30, one of the country's most wanted Baader-Meinhof terrorists after discovering his fingerprints on a getaway car used in a 124,000 mark ($50,000) bank raid on Wednesday.

A spokesman for the West German Federal Criminal Bureau said that Klar's fingerprints were found on a car discovered near a savings bank in the north German industrial town of Bochum, which was robbed by three masked women armed with pistols shortly after opening time Wednesday morning.

He said Klar had probably acted as getaway driver but there was no evidence that the three women involved in the raid were other Baader-Meinhof terrorists. Klar's girlfriends, Adelheid Schulz, Brigitte Mohnhaupt and Inge Viett were also wanted by the police.

The four are wanted for a series of spectacular killings during 1977, including the murders of federal prosecutor Siegfried Buback, banker Juergen Ponto and West German industrialist Hans-Martin Schleyer.

Since then the Baader-Meinhof gang, also known as the Red Army Faction, has carried out a series of attacks on U.S. Army property and personnel.

Nuclear talks end with no progress

GENEVA (UPI). — The 20-year-old disarmament conference ended its 1982 summer session yesterday with the U.S. accusing Moscow and its allies of blocking talks on the verification of a nuclear test ban.

U.S. negotiator Louis Fields said a working group which was to have focused on how to prevent clandestine testing never even began substantive work because of stalling by communist countries.

"Failure lies squarely on the doorstep of the Eastern Bloc, which doggedly refused to accept a reasonable programme of work," Fields charged.

The only test ban in force is the 1963 limited agreement prohibiting all but underground explosions, which was not signed by China and France.

Fields said the 40-member disarmament conference had made considerable progress during the summer session towards the prohibition of chemical weapons.

Man dies following exposure to radiation

OSLO (UPI). — A man accidentally exposed to gamma radiation for 30 seconds at Norway's nuclear reactor at Kjeller earlier this month died late Wednesday, a hospital spokesman said.

The spokesman said John Lindstad developed radiation sickness after his accidental exposure on September 2.

"The radiation was too strong, even with only a 30-second exposure," the spokesman said. "It destroyed his white blood corpuscles."

Lindstad worked for years as a technician at the test reactor at Kjeller. He was doing routine work in the gamma radiation room when the radiation was turned on without warning.

Lebanese curfew halts relief work in the south

By CHARLES HOFFMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

THE ASSASSINATION of Bashir Jemayel, Lebanon's president-elect, has threatened the fragile political structure of that country with renewed civil conflict, and has temporarily halted relief and reconstruction work in the south. As of yesterday, all towns and villages in South Lebanon were still under curfew.

Several hours before a powerful bomb ripped apart the headquarters of Jemayel's Phalange Party on Tuesday, I was able to visit the Ein Hilwe government hospital in Sidon, which Israeli and Jewish agencies are helping to rebuild. The visit was unplanned, the result of the problems that arose in distributing clothes to the Palestinian refugee camp next door.

The 100-bed hospital was taken over by the terrorists during the fighting for the refugee camp, and suffered extensive damage. Dr. Ted Tulchinsky and Dr. Ya'acov Adler, who work on the staff of the IDF Unit to Aid Lebanese Civilians in Sidon, said that the hospital was slowly getting back on its feet.

The Interfaith Public Committee in Jerusalem, under the auspices of Mayor Teddy Kollek, has offered to rebuild and re-equip the hospital's laboratory.

Over a dozen local workmen were busy on Tuesday repairing the floor that houses the lab and the X-ray unit, which was also heavily damaged. Dr. Tulchinsky said that in about a month the new equipment for the lab could be installed — although this estimate was made before work came to a halt on Wednesday when the curfew was imposed.

The new dialysis unit has been functioning for several weeks, and was donated by the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee. The hospital now also provides limited out-patient care.

Adler and Tulchinsky said that work on the hospital had gone slowly due to foot-dragging by the local hospital administration, abetted, it seems by the anti-Israel minister of health. They said, however, that Israel had to work through the local authorities and should not take over running the hospital from the Lebanese.

'Brother Love' gets 15 years for loving pot

MIAMI, FLORIDA (AP). — Thomas Francis Reilly Jr., also known as Brother Love, was sentenced Monday to 15 years in prison on marijuana-smuggling charges.

Reilly, 39, heads a Miami-area branch of the Ethiopian Zion Coptic branch of the Ethiopian Zion Coptic Church, a long-standing religion in Ethiopia and Jamaica that uses marijuana as a sacrament.

U.S. District Judge William M. Hoeveler ordered Reilly to serve five years each on charges of importation, possession and distribution of marijuana.

Reilly was also sentenced to 12 years, to run concurrently with the other penalties, for "engaging in a continuing pattern of criminal activity."

Reilly, also fined $20,000, complained: "The government has stripped me of everything I have."

The flamboyant religious leader, whose sect has lost past court challenges to state and federal marijuana laws, argued that he was being persecuted for religious reasons.

"I love marijuana. I love God who made it. I don't use it to get drunk. As a son of God, I appreciate that herb," Reilly said.

Hoeveler asked him about the indictment's charges that he imported "tons and tons" of marijuana and bought boats, vehicles and aircraft to transport the contraband and distribute it outside the church.

Reilly responded that the church's tenets called for sharing marijuana with others.

"But for money?" Hoeveler asked.

The Post's Washington Correspondent Wolf Blitzer talks to Israel's Ambassador to the U.S., Moshe Arens

ISRAEL'S Ambassador to the United States, Moshe Arens, is clearly on the front line in dealing with the Reagan administration and its new Middle East peace initiative. Since President Reagan unveiled his blueprint during a nationally-televised address on September 1, Arens has been extremely busy trying to assess the short- and long-term impact on the overall U.S.-Israeli relationship. In a Rosh Hashana interview with The Jerusalem Post, he tried to put the current crisis into some sort of historical perspective.

"I think the bottom of the relationship has not been fundamentally affected by what is a very strong divergence of views that almost borders on the confrontational in its intensity — the fact that the president has taken a position which he himself has described in his position paper as 'unalterable' and the Israeli government has rejected those positions. At its root, I think the relationship continues to be one of very solid friendship, essentially an alliance. I think that by the very nature of that relationship, it cannot be disturbed by differences of opinion — even if they are heated, even if they are strident — about how our common goals are going to be attained."

Arens has his own explanation for the timing of the Reagan plan.

"Clearly," he said, "they thought they saw what they call here a 'window of opportunity.' And if they saw a window of opportunity, it should have been associated in their minds with the one major event of the past few months, namely, the Peace for Galilee operation in Lebanon.

"I think also that as a result of Israel's operation in Lebanon, they perceived themselves to be under strong Arab pressure and therefore felt called upon to demonstrate, at the earliest possible moment, that they were not always yes-sayers to everything that Israel said and everything that Israel did, and that they were ready to take positions that were not consistent with Israel's positions.

ARENS SAID he had discussed the whole subject of a new U.S. peace initiative on several occasions with Secretary of State George Shultz, and that it had become clear that the Americans felt a sense of urgency on the matter.

"My position — and the position of Israel — was at least to put first things first, let things fall into place in Lebanon, exert a concerted and common effort in the pursuance of our common goals there; and that coupling events in Lebanon with some new initiatives directed at the autonomy negotiations could exacerbate the problems and maybe prejudice our ability to gain our objectives in Lebanon.

After a few such conversations, Shultz agreed with Arens that they should first work to remove the PLO from Beirut.

REFERRING to the Palestinian question, the ambassador said he and Shultz had been discussing this matter "during the entire period that the Israeli army stood at the gates of Beirut." The various issues connected with the eventual evacuation of the PLO were discussed and sometimes argued about.

The discussions invariably came back to "what is called here the Palestinian problem" and the need to address this problem urgently in the light of the lessons allegedly learned from the operation in Lebanon. At one stage it had become clear that there was even a possibility that a U.S. initiative might surface even prior to the withdrawal of the PLO from Beirut.

Despite all those conversations, the timing of the Reagan peace plan and its actual form came as quite a shock to Arens, who was then in Israel for U.S. Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger's visit. "The form I didn't know," he said. "The form nobody knew until it was actually presented to us."

HE COMPLAINED that the U.S. had not sufficiently informed Israel of the Reagan plan despite the discussions with Shultz. He distinguished between "discussions" and "consultations"; the latter were indispensable in what were essentially relations of an alliance between Israel and the U.S.

"We have constant discussions with the secretary — if not on a daily basis, certainly on a weekly basis. But these are not the kind of consultations we are talking about. What we would expect as friends and allies of the U.S. — and what I think we have every right to expect — is that before launching an initiative, the U.S. would specifically consult us about that initiative and there would be a meeting either with me here or with the prime minister in Israel where the U.S. representative would put the position paper that was eventually delivered to us on the table and say: 'We are suggesting presenting this list of American positions. What is your opinion about the content and what is your opinion about the timing and what is your opinion about the very presentation?'

"I don't for a minute suggest that we should expect to have a veto on that kind of an initiative although, by the way, there are some contractual commitments which President Ford took upon himself in 1975 where, in essence, there was an American commitment that there would be no American proposals without prior consultations with Israel in order to avoid proposals which are not consistent with Israel's approach."

"I think," said Arens, "we should have expected and could have expected that there would be prior consultations on this specific move and that we would have a chance to comment on it, and maybe then there would be a change either in content or in procedure. There was nothing of the sort. I hadn't the faintest notion — and I must admit that I was shocked while I was in Israel accompanying Secretary Weinberger. I was informed that Ambassador Lewis had gone to see Prime Minister Begin at Nahariya and had presented him with this position paper. In that sense, there was no consultation whatsoever. And by the way, the position paper was presented to King Hussein before it was even presented to us."

He also disclosed that Weinberger himself appeared to have been surprised.

I'm sure that Secretary Weinberger must have been aware that there was a discussion process going on and maybe he was even a party to some of the discussions. But it is my impression that he did not know that on the eve of his arrival in Israel, this position paper was going to be presented to the prime minister."

WHAT IS clearly upsetting to Arens is that the administration had deliberately avoided informing Israel of the new strategy.

"In our discussions with administration officials here, you could almost sense a certain glee about the secretive way in which this thing was handled and about the very few people in the administration who knew of it, and about their great success in aborting any leaks of this initiative. So clearly it was a deliberate decision to do this in a very secretive manner and not to have any prior consultation with Israel on the subject."

It was his opinion that the administration had simply concluded that it would be "more effective" to launch the new initiative that way — even without a hard advance commitment from King Hussein to join the talks.

What did he think would happen if Hussein should eventually join the talks? Would Israel reconsider its rejection of the Reagan plan?

"I think the position of the Israeli government is quite clear and, in my view, quite correct. The president's position paper cannot serve as a basis for negotiations within the framework of the Camp David agreement. And in parallel, the Israeli government has said that it reinstates its invitation to all parties to sit down and to continue the autonomy negotiations. That will continue to be Israel's position, I'm sure, regardless of King Hussein's final response or lack of response.

"King Hussein is invited at the present time to come to the negotiating table, as President Sadat came to Jerusalem in November 1977, without any preconditions for direct negotiations. We don't feel there is any need to guarantee the final outcome of those negotiations before they even start. So if he is ready to come without preconditions for discussions within the framework of Camp David, he will be welcome.

"If what he says is, 'I will negotiate with Israel on one condition, that Israel recognize President Reagan's position paper as the basis for the negotiations, or agree to the points that have been put forward by President Reagan,' then I think the response of the Israeli government is going to be negative."

Assessing what will now happen the ambassador said: "The only thing that can happen is the resumption of the negotiations within the framework of the Camp David agreements without any additional conditions or new frameworks being added to these agreements. I think, therefore, it behooves all parties — the U.S., Israel, Egypt, Jordan if King Hussein is ready to join the negotiations — to do exactly that: to come and sit together and resume the negotiations which have proceeded some very significant distance. It took a long time, but I don't think it would be correct to say that nothing has been accomplished in all that time."

THE DIFFERENCES between Washington and Jerusalem over the Reagan plan have not affected other U.S.-Israeli issues such as military supplies, economic assistance and political support. On this Arens was firm.

He is also convinced that Israel will share fully with the U.S. the military lessons it learned during the fighting in Lebanon, "for the very simple reason that Israel is a member of the democratic community of nations and the United States is the leader of that community of nations...It may take a little time. It is not easy to summarize, to categorize, to classify, to digest all the information that has come out of this complex operation in Lebanon. But I have no doubt that once this is done, the information will be supplied to the United States."

HE DISAGREED emphatically with a popular notion in the American media that U.S.-Israeli relations had slipped to an all-time low. Admittedly there had been ups and downs over the past 34 years, but looked at from an historical perspective he thought that the curve had been going up pretty continuously.

"If you try to compare U.S.-Israeli relations today, in 1982, with U.S.-Israeli relations in 1952, or in 1962, or even in 1972, I think probably you would state that they were better in '62 than in '52 and better in '72 than in '62 and better in '82 than they were in '72.

"Certainly, there is a much bigger appreciation now of Israel's strategic value in the partnership than there was in the past. We started with a relationship that was based almost solely on common values and common traditions and today, clearly, it is common values, common traditions and common interests — a recognition of Israel's ability to contribute to the protection of these interests. That's really a very solid foundation. And I think you will probably not find many countries in the world regarding which you could say there is a more solid foundation existing for their relationship with the United States."

THE AMBASSADOR even saw a silver lining in the fact that the president of the U.S. and the prime minister of Israel were seeking to influence each other's public opinion.

"I think that in the final analysis, if you ask where all this is going to lead, public opinion will determine and decide — and the side that is more successful in swaying public opinion about the justice of their views will be the side, on this particular issue, which will probably come out on top."

One thing that undermines the Israeli government's efforts to influence American public opinion, said Arens, is the fact that some Labour leaders visiting the U.S. have spoken out in favour of the Reagan plan. He would have liked to see more of these personalities follow Begin's example when he led the opposition: in a debate such as the present they should limit their criticism of the government to their appearances at home and not use the platform offered them in America for that purpose.

He lamented especially the recent statements in the U.S. by Shimon Peres and Abba Eban, which he described as "deviations from the norms," but praised other Labour leaders who refused to join this anti-Israel government chorus.

ARENS CONCEDED that the Reagan administration was making some inroads in influencing a few recognized American Jewish leaders to back away from their traditional support for Israel. Their statements expressing some support for the Reagan plan have received extensive publicity in the media.

But Arens does not believe that the American Jewish leadership has moved away from Israel in any significant manner.

"I had a meeting with the leadership of AIPAC (the American Israel Public Affairs Committee), with the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, with the United Jewish Appeal Conference in New York, with a number of individuals, and in my mind there is little doubt that on the whole, the American Jewish community both the organized and the unorganized part of it, will continue to support with considerable enthusiasm the position of the Israeli government on this issue as well."

He has no doubt, however, that the Reagan administration is actively courting the American Jewish community, and rightly so.

"This is an intelligent administration of people who have a considerable degree of sophistication. They are great friends of Israel and in many ways, President Reagan may be the greatest friend that Israel has had in the White House in many, many years. But I think I am telling you nothing new if I say that this is an administration that plays hardball. When they want to achieve a certain objective they go at it very seriously. And so trying to appeal to people in the Jewish community, trying to appeal to people in Israel — that's an obvious part of the tactic and they are doing their best to be successful at it.

DID HE believe the stories that the administration would like to topple the Begin government?

"No," he replied. "I don't believe that is consistent with their norms and their values and their mode of behaviour. I think that they probably do believe that if they were to succeed in winning the battle for public opinion, if I can say, in large measure among the American Jewish community and other supporters of Israel, then this would have some effect on the position of the Israeli government.

In countering the U.S. efforts, he said, Israel itself has to wage a very active campaign to explain its positions — and we are in the process of doing that."

By coming out with a specific blueprint, the U.S. had compromised its role as mediator in the negotiations, Arens said. That is bound to make another round of talks more difficult to get underway but "we're hoping that it is not going to abort the negotiations."

'President Reagan may be the greatest friend Israel has had in the White House in many, many years...but this is an administration that plays hardball'

WEST BANK PERSPECTIVES

By DAVID RICHARDSON

BRITISH and European diplomats did not hide their disappointment last year when Britain's foreign secretary Lord Carrington in his capacity as president of the EEC Council of Ministers failed to meet Yasser Arafat. The chairman of the PLO was unwilling or perhaps unable to hold out even the possibility of recognizing Israel in exchange for formal European recognition of his organization.

"We told Arafat we did not expect him to play his main card of recognition, but we did want a glimpse of it," explained a British diplomat following the demise of the European initiative.

In the wake of this disappointment, Western diplomats active on the West Bank and others interested in developments in the area began toying with the idea of engineering some movement in the Middle East peace process via the West Bank.

They realized that Arafat and the moderate PLO leadership could not go along with the mutual recognition which is the primary mechanism of the European idea of a solution: the Syrian presence in Lebanon and the organization's own diehard ideologues who so often serve other, non-Palestinian interests, made it impossible. It was these pressures that had made Arafat retract his initial endorsement of the Fahd eight-point plan. Some limited progress on the West Bank might present the PLO with a sufficient threat of a separate solution to strengthen Arafat's hand against the Syrians and his own rejectionists.

West Bankers continually reported meetings with Jerusalem consuls and their political aides: and the increased activity of the diplomats was also noted by the military government, who complained that their own political work was being hampered.

The idea of a separate movement on the West Bank, with perhaps even the indirect blessing of elements in the PLO, gained credibility when it became apparent that many West Bankers were becoming more and more dissatisfied with the PLO's inability to move. The PLO, it appeared to them, was unaware of the increasing pace of settlement and its implications, and was hampered by the concerns of its own immediate survival and those of its constituency, which was not in the West Bank or Gaza but rather in the refugee camps of Lebanon.

The most dramatic expresson of this perhaps was Bethlehem mayor Elias Freij's public call on the PLO to "challenge Israel for peace"; but there were also other signs such as the open debate among young lecturers and intellectuals at West Bank universities for a dialogue with the Israeli academic community.

But in the end, apart from the village leagues which were, from the start tainted by their close association with the military government, such dissatisfaction with the PLO as there was in the West Bank was insufficient to justify any European or other hopes for a separate move towards a solution with Israel.

For good measure, the military government also put a spoke in the wheels — perhaps unintentionally but nonetheless effectively. The removal of the major pro-PLO mayors in the West Bank earlier this year and a series of other repressive measures against other "nationalist elements" as they somewhat exclusively refer to themselves, removed any possible bridge to the PLO and increased resentment and nationalist feelings in the street. Movement for accommodation with Israel became more difficult.

HOW THEN have the war in Lebanon, the Reagan initiative and the Fez summit affected the West Bank and Gaza. To judge by conversations with the people in the area over the past few weeks, Palestinians in the territories are still perhaps the most incongruous bystanders in the political developments that will ultimately change their lives at least as much as those of the other people involved in the conflict.

They are by no means indifferent to what is happening; but they are aware that the political gains the PLO appeared to reap from the ruins of Beirut have reinforced its leadership of the Palestinian cause. They are only too conscious that the focus of attention is now on Tunis rather than what is said and done in Nablus.

Arafat emerged from Beirut with the respect and admiration not only of the shabab — the youths in the street — and the highly political left wing, but also of conservative elements who had, in the past, privately expressed their scorn for his leadership and style.

"Arafat proved himself a fighter and a leader," said one East Jerusalemite of this stripe.

"National pride has increased as a result of the war and that is not mere rhetoric," said an acquaintance in Ramallah last week. "I did not think that our people could be as courageous as they proved to be."

It is now popular to refer to the war in Lebanon as the "80 day war," to contrast the PLO's stand in Beirut with the IDF's rout of four Arab armies in six days in June 1967.

For many, the exodus of the PLO from Beirut was not only the end of an era — which several West Bankers were honest enough to admit was not all glorious — but also held the promise of a long-needed change in the tactics of the organization.

"I think that there is a majority of us in the territories in favour of mutual recognition and coexistence with Israel," noted a left-wing intellectual. "The Israeli expulsion of the PLO from Beirut has helped Arafat detach himself from the Syrian and more extreme factions in his own organization without any cost to himself."

Interviewed during the Fez summit Mahmoud Abu Zuluf, editor of the East Jerusalem daily El-Kuds, spoke of the open tension between Arafat and Syrian President Hafez al Assad. "There is a clear disagreement," he said, "and I anticipate a split or ideological change in the PLO."

Other West Bankers concurred, some fearing that the Syrians would start using the PLO units under their control for spectacular terror attacks in an attempt to sabotage any moves towards moderation by Arafat and the PLO apparatus now establishing itself in Tunis.

THE REAGAN initiative certainly came at a suitable time from the West Banker's point of view. While it was clear that the U.S. president appeared to be focusing on the territories, it was also abundantly clear that the response both the Americans and the West Bankers (and, for that matter, the Israeli government) were expecting would come from Fez.

Seen from here, Reagan erred in proposing a solution that stopped short of the right to independence for the Palestinians; but the change in the American position and the de facto snub of the Begin government in the way the plan was delivered were regarded as encouraging.

A merchant on one of the main streets of Ramallah said that he hoped the PLO would accept the plan. "For too long we have been saying no. The time has now come for us to say yes."

Another, well-informed resident of the town said that many people were coming round to support the American plan. "The reputation of people like Freij (who immediately welcomed the plan) has been enhanced — there is a feeling of change and anticipation in the air."

"The plan can't just be dismissed because it comes from the Americans — it still has something. But if this is their maximum it does not meet our minimum and the gap has to be bridged," said a one-time activist in the National Guidance Committee, which was outlawed by the military government. "The Americans, like the Labour Party in Israel, are political dinosaurs. They cannot neglect the rise of Palestinian nationalism in the territories over the past 15 years — 'it's no longer merely a 'refugee problem'."

"We should leave the door open," advised another very pro-PLO figure in the area. "Outright rejection would be playing into the hands of the Israelis."

An even more positive response came from Abu Zuluf. "Reagan tells me as a Palestinian Arab that in a few years' time there will be no occupation and that we will have self-government. Should I say no to that? It would be crazy."

Abu Zuluf even has his own scenario of future developments. He foresees that the PLO will go along with the Reagan plan in one way or another, but that it will take two years to arrive at a solution and a further three years to implement it.

Another far less enthusiastic view comes from one of Abu Zuluf's neighbours in East Jerusalem, Ibrahim Dakkak, an engineer and former secretary of the National Guidance Committee. He now heads the Arab Thought Forum, a group of left-wing West Bank intellectuals.

According to Dakkak, there is an imbalance in the strategic situation in the Middle East, which currently tilts in favour of the U.S. "In such a situation the Palestinians cannot anticipate any real negotiations but more of a diktat."

THERE IS widespread distrust of the U.S. and scepticism about Reagan's willingness or ability to pressure Israel to make the concession the Palestinians regard as the minimum. But there is also a grudging realization that following the war in Lebanon, only the U.S. is capable of delivering a solution. Without the Americans, said several people, the PLO's evacuation from Beirut would have been quite different.

The Soviet Union, like most of the Arab states, proved totally unreliable precisely when the Palestinians most needed their assistance. Criticism of Moscow and the major Arab capitals has been unprecedentedly bitter. Some of the intellectuals, on the West Bank, however, still place hopes in "the support of the Arab masses" where, they are sure, there will eventually be significant changes which will help the Palestinians.

But Dakkak and the circles he represents regard it a mistake to rely on the Americans, and they would prefer some international convention, perhaps under UN auspices, which would give the Soviets a role and allow the Palestinians to play off one superpower against the other.

This objection to accepting the mantle of U.S. diplomacy is only partly tactical. It also reflects a Third World ideology of non-alignment which has many adherents in the West Bank.

"Why should we antagonize the Soviet Union to fit into the American scheme of things?" argues Dakkak. "We don't want to serve the U.S. confrontation with the Russians."

THE REAGAN endorsement of a "strong association with Jordan" is predictably one of the most divisive issues in the president's conception for local Palestinians. Pro-Jordanian elements in the area who have weakened in the 15 years of the Israeli presence have, however, never really relinquished their hold and have come out in favour of the plan.

But for others, particularly those on the left wing and those who came to the fore after 1967, the return of a Jordanian presence or a return to Jordanian sovereignty presents a threat which almost makes a continued Israeli presence preferable if, in the long run, the option of full Palestinian independence is strengthened.

The fear and perceived threat of a return to Jordanian control is palpable. Many of those who expressed it stressed that they were not to be quoted.

Jordan poses a challenge to the Palestinian sense of separateness which has grown under Israel.

"Under occupation there is a clash of cultures, there is no way we can be absorbed. But," said a Ramallah resident who pointed to the popularity of Palestinian folklore in art and literature over the past few years, "if we return to Jordan we could be absorbed and lose our culture, as have those Palestinians who live in Jordan."

Privately, several people admitted that they were disappointed with the outcome of the Fez summit conference. Their expectations of a more dramatic and determined move to corner Israel diplomatically were fuelled by the assumed political gains the PLO took with it when it left Beirut, and even more so by the content and timing of the Reagan initiative.

But for many of the people in the territories it is clear that for the time being the fulcrum of Palestinian politics is once again definitely Yasser Arafat. How long that lasts depends on how considerate Arafat is going to be of the pressing concerns of the Palestinians still in Palestine.

New years

TORA AND FLORA / Louis I. Rabinowitz

WHEN WE MENTION Rosh Hashana, the Jewish New Year, we think automatically and exclusively of the Day of Judgement which takes place on the first of Tishri and reaches its climax ten days later with Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement.

If this is so, the orders of the tractates of the Mishnah which is the authoritative code of Jewish law compiled by R. Judah HaNasi in the second century and which is the basis of the Talmud, seems to be wrong. The order is Pesachim, dealing with Passover which falls in Nisan; Yoma, whose subject is the Day of Atonement; Sukkah, whose subject is the festival of that name; and only after that comes Tractate Rosh Hashana.

The answer is simple. Just as in our civil calendar we have two new years, January 1, for calendrical reckoning and April 1 for income tax purposes (the Day of Material Reckoning!), so the first Mishnah of Rosh Hashana informs us that there are no less than four Rosh Hashana in the Jewish year, of which that which falls this weekend is only the first.

As far as the other three are concerned, for our present purpose it is sufficient to point out that "everyone knows" that the New Year for Trees falls on the 15th of Shevat (but according to Beth Shammai on the 1st) in which case there is apparently no connection between the Rosh Hashana which we shall celebrate this weekend and the world of flora.

But it is not so. If the New Year for Trees falls in Shevat, the first of Tishri is also, as the Mishnah states "the New Year for planting and for vegetables." It does not mean, as can of course be understood, that planting of trees takes place on that day; the fixing of that date is for a different purpose altogether.

In the spring of 1980 my wife planted a sprig of apricot in the bed surrounding our verandah, and it has taken root and flourished to such an extent that this year it produced a few luscious looking apricots. I was sorely tempted to eat them as "the work of my hands (or rather my wife's!) wherewith to glorify, but I was forbidden to do so since they constituted Orlah, as fruit is called during the first three years. (Lev. 19.23-5).

When will that fruit become edible according to the Tora? On Rosh Hashana 5741 (Sept. 1) it had already entered its second year, since the first of Tishri is the New Year for Planting, and with this Rosh Hashana it enters its third year and thereafter it will be permitted for consumption.

THE LEBANESE MORASS

By DAVID BERNSTEIN

TWO QUITE disparate events have come together this past week to underscore the dubious nature of Israel's present policy in Lebanon. These were the violent death of Lebanese president-elect Bashir Jemayel, in Tuesday's explosion at Phalange headquarters in downtown Beirut, and Yasser Arafat's private audience a day later with Pope John Paul II.

Arafat's much sought-after audience with the pope, which will undoubtedly have enhanced his prestige in the eyes of hundreds of millions of Roman Catholics throughout the world, was a political coup of the first order.

Following closely on the heels of the 12th Arab summit's endorsement in Fez earlier this month of the PLO as the "sole legitimate representative of the Palestinians," the papal audience — supplemented by the hero's welcome Arafat received at the Interparliamentary Union conference in Rome and a series of meetings with Italy's top leadership — would appear to have made nonsense of the Begin government's claim that the PLO's military defeat in Beirut spelled its political eclipse as well.

And the death of Jemayel would appear to have made equally nonsensical the never very convincing claim that Operation Peace for Galilee, in its expanded phase, had paved the way for the emergence of a strong, central authority in Beirut that would be able both to reunite the war-torn country and to sign a peace treaty with Israel.

DURING THE eight years or so before Operation Peace for Galilee, Israel had secretly been working with Jemayel, according to foreign reports, arming and training his Phalange militia.

It would seem that, at first, the main goal was simply to join forces with a natural ally in a common war against the PLO in Lebanon, with whatever long-term political credit Israel might gain from the relationship largely incidental.

But at some point, Israel's ambitions appear to have grown much larger — very probably encouraged by Jemayel himself, who, from the start, championed the secret alliance with Israel in the face of quite considerable opposition within the Phalange. And the prospect of peace with a Lebanon liberated from the PLO and the Syrians, united under the strong leadership of Bashir Jemayel, became, it would seem, increasingly enticing — and, in the eyes of the present government, immediately achievable.

Operation Peace for Galilee, once it evolved beyond what was ostensibly its original goal of creating a 40-kilometre cordon sanitaire along Israel's northern border, set the realization of this dream as a declared goal.

BUT QUITE EARLY on in the campaign, there were already some misgivings in Jerusalem that something was not quite right about the alliance with Jemayel, as the Phalange more or less sat back while Israel took on the Syrians and the PLO in Beirut with little more than token support.

With the rapid approach of the Lebanese presidential elections, Jemayel appears to have become increasingly aware of the paradox that while the Israeli invasion had undoubtedly greatly boosted his chances of obtaining the presidency — this may, in fact, have had something to do with the timing of the campaign — too close an identification with Israel would greatly undermine his bid to build a united Lebanon by effecting a reconciliation with his erstwhile Moslem foes.

Accordingly, he himself kept an exteremely low profile in all his dealings with Israel, while at the same time putting out feelers both to the Syrians and to Lebanon's Moslem leaders with a view to such a reconciliation.

If this proved disturbing to Israel — and there were rumblings that Jemayel expected to have Lebanon delivered to him on a silver platter — Jemayel's conduct after his election last month was even more so.

Prime Minister Begin had to go so far as to hold a clandestine meeting in Nahariya earlier this month, at which he reportedly chided the Lebanese president-elect for his apparent lack of enthusiasm for Israel's grand design of open and immediate normalization of relations between their two countries.

The fact that news of the meeting was leaked to the press infuriated the Phalange, who warned Jerusalem that by seeking to highlight Jemayel's link with Israel, it was placing in the gravest jeopardy all that the two sides had worked for in Lebanon.

There will undoubtedly be those in the days and weeks ahead who will blame Israel, for contributing of Jemayel's death by pressing too hard, apparently for its own domestic purposes, for an early peace treaty with Lebanon.

IN THE FINAL analysis, however, Israel appears to have been deluding itself that it was indeed possible for Jemayel to establish himself at the head of a united Lebanon and at the same time conclude an early peace treaty with Israel. That was never on.

Jemayel may well have been quite genuine in his protestations that he needed time to build up his own position and achieve a national reconciliation before he could enter into the kind of relationship Israel wanted.

Whether or not this was indeed so, or whether political realities in the region would have made such a course impossible, will now probably never be known. The Phalange has itself acknowledged that any government in Lebanon would have to conduct itself in a manner broadly acceptable to Syria if it wished to remain independent.

Whoever follows Jemayel is not very likely to continue the kind of relationship with Israel that Jemayel had built up — both because the pro-Israeli line in the Phalange was very largely the product of Jemayel's own vigorous championship, and because any potential successor is likely to associate last Tuesday's assassination with too close an identification with Israel.

Peace with Lebanon, then, would now appear to be out of reach for the foreseeable future.

PERHAPS EVEN more disturbing, however, is the fact that Jemayel's death has left a power vacuum that could plunge Lebanon into another bloody round of civil war, with Israel in the middle, having to maintain order between warring Christian and Moslem factions.

So far, there has been no sign of the Phalange going on the rampage to avenge their leader's death. This could simply be the result of shock at Jemayel's assassination or, more hopefully, the existence of a strong command struture that is proving itself able to maintain discipline and enforce a policy of restraint.

Should law and order break down, however, Israel will find itself in the invidious role of policeman (the IDF's deployment in West Beirut and the curfew imposed on towns and villages in South Lebanon following the assassination have already indicated its readiness to take on the role.)

Ironically, the IDF may, in fact, find itself defending Lebanon's Moslem and large Palestinian population against the wrath of its Phalange allies — an irony that will no doubt be savoured in Damascus, which had itself invaded Lebanon to help the Christians, only to find itself having to switch sides and protect the PLO and the Moslems against the Phalange.

But even if Israel's massive military presence in Lebanon is able to stave off an immediate breakdown in law and order, there remains the thorny constitutional problem of finding a credible long-term successor to outgoing President Elias Sarkis.

With no candidate of anything like the calibre of Bashir Jemayel in sight, the IDF's policing role could keep it in Lebanon much longer than might have been foreseen when the original goal of Operation Peace for Galilee was expanded to include the establishment of a strong, central authority in Lebanon.

ALTHOUGH ISRAEL'S "mandate" in Lebanon is, unlike that of the Syrians, self-imposed, and can be terminated whenever it deems fit, there is little possibility that Israel will, in fact, abandon what now appears to be a mission impossible and get out of the morass in Lebanon as quickly as possible.

Neither would one advocate such a course, for reasons of conscience no less than politics.

Having shattered the Lebanese equation and established the ascendancy of the Christian militias, it would be reprehensible to leave Lebanon in a state of chaos, with the country's largely defenceless Moslem and Palestinian population at the mercy of a Phalange bent on vengeance — or, by the same token, to leave the now leaderless Phalange at the mercy of the Syrian and PLO forces in the Bekaa and northern Lebanon.

And politically, no one would really expect Israel to leave a power vacuum in Lebanon that would probably be immediately filled by the PLO and their leftist allies, throwing away even that little that has been achieved at so horrendous a cost in human lives — Israeli, Lebanese and Palestinian alike.

The alternative, it would seem, would be to let the ordeal run its course, with Israel playing out the seemingly tragic role it has brought upon itself as the result of a thoroughly ill-conceived policy in Lebanon, with all the inexorable agony of a Greek tragedy.

Travesty of truth

By SHMUEL KATZ

POLITICIANS EVERYWHERE often tend to treat their publics as if they were a class of know-nothings and remember-nothings. American statesmen are no exception. One of the key passages in President Ronald Reagan's television address on September 1 is an example of grand dissimulation.

"The United States," he said, "has thus far sought to play the role of mediator; we have avoided public comment on the key issues... but it has become evident to me that some clearer sense of America's position on the key issues is necessary to encourage wider support for the peace process."

Nothing could be more misleading. In the process that brought about the Camp David agreement, it was Washington that initiated all the changes in the original Israeli "peace plan." U.S. mediation consisted almost entirely of pressing the Israeli negotiators to make concession after concession — "otherwise Sadat won't agree to negotiate."

The U.S. has, in fact, very seldom played the role of mediator. It has had a very definite policy of its own throughout the dispute

Since 1967, its objectives have been fixed by the principle that Samaria and Judea (including east Jerusalem) are "occupied Jordanian territory." It has thus erased from the official national memory Trans-Jordan's rape of Western Palestine in 1948; and legitimized its annexation and the renaming of Judea and Samaria.

This grotesque travesty of historical and political truth, and of accepted norms of international behaviour, is encapsulated in the "operative" proposal that Israel must withdraw into the 1949 Armistice Lines ("with minor modifications"). All American diplomacy has worked towards that end since 1969. Mediation, indeed.

IT IS ALL the more amusing that Washington has described President Reagan's plan as "new." It is, in fact, the same old plan with cosmetic adjustments. Its essence: Israel's withdrawal from "all the territories" and their transfer to Arab rule. Period.

The notions ventilated by Washington that the U.S. would thereafter somehow influence the form of Arab government and its policy towards Israel are patently absurd.

(Five years ago, Professor Zbigniew Brzezinski, then President Carter's national security adviser, suggested, in conversation with me, the kind of plan now put forward by President Reagan. He even added demilitarization as bait. When, apart from other objections, I said demilitarization did not work and that nothing could prevent, for example, a Soviet airlift of arms, his reaction was that "Israel could always go back in." I replied that then he would be the first to denounce Israel for invading Arab sovereign territory and to demand that Israel withdraw within 24 hours. He smilingly refrained from denying the imputation).

THE KEY ELEMENTS in the "Reagan plan" were proposed in formal terms in December 1969 — by Secretary of State Rogers. They included just about all the cosmetics of the Reagan version. The Rogers plan, too, emphasized its adherence to Resolution 242, including the provision for "secure and recognized borders (though hastening to add that only minor modifications of the 1949 Armistic lines were envisaged. It even emphasized that Jerusalem must remain united. The Reagan plan differs from it in substance only by providing for local autonomy for the Arabs of the "West Bank" and Gaza — within Jordanian sovereignty, of course.

The Israeli Government rejected the Rogers plan outright — after calling Ambassador Yitzhak Rabin from Washington for consultations. Prime Minister Golda Meir attacked the plan in two trenchant speeches in the Knesset. She was quoted as saying privately that acceptance of the plan would be an act of treachery.

WHAT IS TRULY new then about the Reagan plan is the friendly response of the Labour Alignment. Mr. Peres and his colleagues (who endorsed the Camp David agreement) pretend not to be aware that the very promulgation of new proposals itself undermines that agreement, pre-empting the negotiations which, under the agreement, are to take place years ahead, and replacing them by a pre-cooked outcome.

Though the plan calls for complete Israeli withdrawal (slightly modified) — the Labour leaders pretend that it is similar to their own idea — which is to partition Western Eretz Yisrael. The Labour plan (unless it has been secretly changed) involves the retention under Israeli sovereignty of the strip along the Jordan, the Etzion-Hebron bloc, several areas in Samaria and united Jerusalem. Mr. Peres and his colleagues cannot but be aware that this plan is as unacceptable to the Arabs — and thus to Washington — as any other plan which does not guarantee the complete surrender of "all the territories."

They have turned their backs on Golda Meir's sanity of purpose — and their motives are transparent. They aim at inducing the Israeli public to believe that their "moderate" policy of "compromise" will find favour in the eyes of Washington. They assume that this could be a major factor at the next election, or maybe even earlier; that the sense of dependence on the United States in Israeli society is strong enough to assure them of a majority.

Nothing could suit the American policy-makers better. Indeed, they are uninhibitedly happy about the internal opposition which they expect Labour (and its fringe-group allies) to develop to the government's policy. They hope that this will impose restraints on Begin when, as they believe, he agrees to negotiate with them on the substance of the "plan."

It will be presented to him as an adjustment of the Camp David agreement; allowing the participation of the Arabs of east Jerusalem to take part in the election of the autonomy council for the "West Bank"; freezing settlements in Judea and Samaria — to encourage the Arab inhabitants to join the autonomy process; and on the assurance that King Hussein and not Yasser Arafat will be sovereign in Judea, Samaria and Gaza, an Israeli promise to surrender "all the territories" (with, of course, minor modifications).

Diplomatic pressure will be accompanied by a campaign in the media; it will inevitably be orchestrated with European diplomacy and with world-wide Arab propaganda.

This prospect is one reason why Secretary of State George Shultz reacted calmly to the passionate declarations by the prime minister in the Knesset that he was entering upon the struggle for Eretz Yisrael which, as he rightly declared, was a matter of politics to the United States, but a matter of life to the Jewish people.

THERE IS, however, another reason for Mr. Shultz's cool comment that Mr. Begin's speech was merely the opening gambit in negotiations. The Americans have heard it before; and the State Department experts have in front of them the Camp David agreement and the minutes of the discussions.

There is no hint there of Zionist inspiration. There is not a single word there about the unique relationship of the Jewish people with its historic homeland, not a word of its rights to the country.

The agreement accords to Egypt and Jordan equal rights with Israel in deciding on the final disposition of the "West Bank," and accords a veto right on that crucial subject not to the Jewish people, but to the Arab inhabitants.

All this was signed and approved by the prime minister of Israel. Why, then, should the Americans not assume that when Mr. Begin reverts to his pre-Camp David formulations they are anything more than an opening gambit?

The prime minister's reply to President Reagan's letter compounds the blunders of the Camp David agreement.

The agreement did give the control of internal security to the Arab autonomy council, not to Israel. The agreement did accord Jordan a status in Western Eretz Yisrael.

But this is not the time and these are not the circumstances to argue with Washington over this or that clause in the Camp David agreement. The U.S., like Egypt, is no longer interested in the Camp David process.

If the prime minister wishes the Americans to take him seriously, and if he understands that the issue is once more Eretz Yisrael or Falastin, and truly intends to rally the people in Israel to that banner — he must, without delay, make it clear that for him, too, the Camp David agreement, holus bolus, is dead.

Angry refugees at Ein Hilwe (Charles Hoffman)

Ill-fated goodwill

By CHARLES HOFFMAN/Jerusalem Post Reporter

WHAT BEGAN as a well-intentioned project to donate used clothes to the Palestinian refugees in the Ein Hilwe camp in Sidon turned into a violent anti-Israel demonstration and ended in chaos, as hundreds of refugees scrambled and fought to grab whatever they could.

During the first few weeks of the war, the people of Jerusalem donated some 20 tons of clothes for hundreds of thousands of Lebanese who had supposedly lost their homes and possessions during the fighting. It turned out that the Lebanese neither needed or wanted the clothes, and were insulted by the very notion.

The refugees in the camps, though, most of whose shacks were reduced to rubble in the fighting, did need them. But they refused to take anything "tainted" with the stamp of Israel.

So the clothes gathered dust in the storerooms of Magen David Adom and the municipality over the summer. Last week a worker for Terre des Hommes, a Swiss relief organization, who had been in Ein Hilwe since the war, heard about them. Jacqueline, the Terre des Hommes representative, thought that it would be a good idea to distribute the clothes using her organization as cover.

The IDF Unit to Aid Lebanese Civilians in Sidon liked the idea, too, and coordinated the project with the Jerusalem Municipality, which sponsors an interfaith committee to aid the Lebanese. The city had the clothes piled on two trucks and shipped to Sidon early Tuesday morning, accompanied by this reporter.

We all know where the road paved with good intentions leads. The road into Ein Hilwe, a few minutes' drive east of the centre of Sidon, is not paved. The approaches to the camp, which housed about 25,000 refugees before the war, still bears the marks of a war zone. The dirt road is full of ruts, potholes and rivulets of sewage. The charred buildings in the shikun-style housing project next to the camp are still riddled with gaping holes and pockmarks, although repair work has started.

THE CAMP itself, along with hundreds of its residents, was held hostage for several weeks in June by terrorists who refused to surrender. The shelling of the camp and the close-quarter fighting there ground most of it down to bits of shattered walls, twisted metal and scattered personal belongings. Since most of the men between 18 and 60 had been rounded up and imprisoned as suspected terrorists, almost the only people there now are the women, children and old men. They live in the ruins of their former homes or in make-shift shelter.

The children proudly show off their collections of spent shell casings to visitors. There are still live shells there in the ruins as well, and recent terrorist acts in the area have been traced to the camp.

One of the trucks piled high with bundles of clothes lumbered into the camp about one p.m., three hours late. The delay was caused by sloppy work on the part of the municipality in securing entry permits into Lebanon, and so we were held up at the border. The people in the camp had been waiting since 7.30. The mukhtar of the camp was supposed to be there with lists of needy families to ensure an orderly distribution.

But there was no mukhtar and no lists. The truck was surrounded by hundreds of angry, impatient women and children. There was no one from the IDF, only Jacqueline (who refused to give her full name), the driver, the Jerusalem municipality representative and myself.

Before long our cover story was torn to shreds. Women started screaming. "We don't want your rags, we want our husbands. Where are our husbands?" Some people climbed on the truck, and began untying bundles and throwing items of clothing — at us.

While Jacqueline and the man from the municipality, Yitzhak Tamir, were wondering what to do next, the crowd turned hostile, throwing rocks, brandishing sticks and pushing us around. The women kept screaming for their husbands.

THE DRIVER decided he had enough, started up and drove off with Tamir inside the truck and me hanging on the outside. Jacqueline was given a protective escort out of the camp by four UNRWA workers, also camp residents. Jacqueline and I took refuge in the Ein Hilwe government hospital next to the camp, while the truck waited outside. It drove off after the mob came running after us, throwing stones.

Inside the hospital Jacqueline and the UNRWA workers held a strategy session, joined by two doctors from the IDF aid unit who were there dealing with requests from local residents for referral for treatment in Israel. Another well-intentioned plan was devised, whereby the clothes would be put in storage and distributed quietly and gradually to the appropriate families.

As we were looking for a way to get back to the headquarters of the IDF aid unit, a border police unit with three jeeps and a half-track bristling with machine-guns drove up. They had been sent by Tamir and the driver to extricate us from the camp area.

Later, these good intentions exploded, too, when it became apparent that no storage space could be located. Meanwhile, several residents of the camp had come to the aid unit, saying that the people did want the clothes and pleading for the truck to be sent back. That convinced the officers of the aid unit and Jacqueline, who decided to send both trucks back to Ein Hilwe. Tamir expressed reservations about the idea, but was unable to assert any control over what was clearly Jacqueline's show.

The official of the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs in charge of coordinating aid to South Lebanon, Eli Tzur, was at headquarters too, but he was not involved in the project. Later he said: "I told the municipality that the refugees, even those at Ein Hilwe, don't need the clothes. What they really need is housing and their men back."

The city had originally intended for one truck of clothes to go to the camp and the other to be distributed by the Sidon YWCA. Contact with the YWCA had been made through the International Christian Embassy in Jerusalem, whose representative had left Jerusalem with us that morning. But since the city failed to arrange an entry permit for her, she was turned back at Rosh Hanikra. No one in Sidon had heard of the plan to take a truck to the YWCA.

The first truck was then sent back to Ein Hilwe, this time with an IDF escort. As it stopped for a minute outside the aid unit headquarters, it was surrounded by children who grabbed a few bundles of clothes and pulled them apart in the middle of the street.

NOW all pretense at orderly distribution according to need was dropped, and the trucks were simply parked in the middle of the approach road to Ein Hilwe, in front of the hospital. Whoever spotted the truck was welcome to come take a bundle, and it was not certain whether only refugees lined up.

Word spread rapidly. Hundreds of people came and pounced on the first truck, dragging their bundles through the dust and the mud. People shouted, cursed and fought over who would get what. One family put a few bundles into the back seat of a somewhat tarnished Mercedes and drove off.

The second truck came after the first was picked clean, and the mob went into action again. Half the contents of this truck had not been packed properly in the first place. Clothes were lying loose in the back, and dozens of children scaled the sides of the open truck to pluck out and throw down what they wanted.

Jacqueline, Tamir, and the head of the aid unit in Sidon, Sgan-Aluf Zvi Vardi, sat in a jeep at a safe distance from the spectacle, unable to intervene. In 15 minutes or so, this truck was left without a stitch, too. And we pulled out, our good deed done.

FESTIVAL DIARY

ORFEON DONOSTIARRA CHOIR, directed by Antonio Ayestaran; Israel Chamber Orchestra; soloists: Gila Yaron, soprano; Philip Creech, tenor; John Shirley Quirk, bass-bariton; with Uri Segal conducting (Mann Auditorium, Tel Aviv, September 12.). Ariaga: Overture to "The Happy Slaves;" Haydn: "The Creation" oratorio.

It is no exaggeration to say that the Orfeon Donostiarra Choir and two of the soloists, tenor Philip Creech and bass John Shirley Quirk, saved this evening from total failure. The choir is a well-attuned body, versed in oratorio style and having a full range of dynamics. Everything between pianissimo and climactic fortissimo passages emerged in a multitude of spacious sonorities.

Musically, and particularly in terms of musical representation, it was John Shirley Quirk who provided the most rewarding moments of the evening. Occasionally a slight lack of composedness was felt in his vocal line, but this may have been the result of his ambition to sound as dramatic as possible.

His German diction was sheer delight and a blessing in the absence of a German libretto. No less spectacular was the tenor's diction, who projected the German text without the slightest accent, an astonishing and highly praiseworthy achievement for an American.

In the second half of the evening, Philip Creech's voice finally warmed up to the music in sonorous and well-shaped phrases.

With the evaluation of the choir and the two principals, everything positive about the performance has been said. The rest was simply bad. For Gila Yaron, it is too late to change her completely wrong singing technique. Her sounds emerge cramped and distorted. Her vibrato-ridden voice makes one constantly think of a thin hollow tube. Her vocalism possesses no substance and is devoid of musical meaning.

The orchestra was not up to its potential standard, sounding thin and poor with strings constantly out of tune, it never matched the level of the choir. But it was mainly Uri Segal's fault that The Creation became a long and boring composition. His slow tempi had a devastating effect, and the lack of conception and character did not allow the music to lift off the ground.

THE YEAR OF RABIN

PUBLIC FACES/Mark Segal

POLITICAL CONSTELLATIONS. According to the stars, 5743 may well be the Year of Rabin. At least that's the view of our three favourite astrologers, contacted for their pre-Rosh Hashana predictions this week. All of them see big things in the future for Yitzhak Rabin.

Danny Herman was the most forthcoming, seeing the Labour ex-premier holding a top ministry in a National Unity Government to be formed in January. Hans Zeuger and Ilan Pecker also thought that Rabin would do well, but declined to be as specific.

Herman said that there would be a new cabinet early in 1983, with someone other than Ariel Sharon holding the defence portfolio. But Arik's supporters can take heart from the continuation of the astrologer's prediction, which has our Unstoppable Hero bouncing back and reaching the pinnacle of power sometime around 1987.

The coming year, according to Pecker, will be Menachem Begin's last as prime minister. Both Pecker and Herman see problems with Begin's health during the coming year, Zeuger plenty of trouble in the stars for Finance Minister Yoram Aridor.

STILL SPEAKING of the stars, the countdown is certainly on for Herut's December convention. Latest reports have old associates Aridor and Deputy Premier David Levy making a supreme effort to get back into the same orbit after some recent differences, which such Levy rivals as Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir had sought to exploit. According to my Herut sources, Levy and Aridor have all but wrapped up the conference, agreeing to give the former the chairmanship of the all-powerful steering committee, while the latter keeps his post as head of the party secretariat.

The arrangement seems likely to keep Shamir in a state of partisan eclipse. When the foreign minister met Aridor to promise his faction's support to the finance minister, Aridor reportedly did little but puff his pipe in return.

Meanwhile, Shamir keeps on barnstorming the party branches, hewing to a hawkish line which cannot but please Sharon. The defence minister, meanwhile, continues his courtship of party keymen. It is said that Sharon never flies up to Lebanon without an "escort" from some Herut branch. Last Friday, for example, Sharon hosted a group of local pols from Rehovot, Lod-Ramle and Rishon Lezion, led by regional branch boss Ben-Ami Kaplan.

DENIAL OF THE WEEK. Sharon's spokesmen at the Defence Ministry have had their hands full recently disclaiming their boss's statements. Most recent opportunity to say it wasn't so came on the subject of the juicy Sharon quotes published in the most recent issue of Time magazine, in which the minister is reported to have said "the dogs may bark but the caravan goes on its way," and to have asked his aides: "How can I get rid of Begin"?"

For the new year, might I suggest that Sharon aide Uri Dan draft a weekly denial sheet, ready for use the minute anybody quotes Sharon about anything.

RUMOUR OF THE WEEK. I have been unable to obtain any confirmation or denial of the story currently circulating in the diplomatic community. According to the very much unconfirmed story, Yitzhak Rabin will be Sharon's replacement at the Defence Ministry.

ADVICE IGNORED. Why did Shimon Peres ignore his aides' counsel and offer this week to take up Begin's short-lived early elections proposal? Some Labour sources say that the party leader is willing to risk a thrashing at the polls in order to short-circuit the challenges of Rabin and perhaps President Yitzhak Navon as well. Rabin did not enhance his popularity among the party faithful with his adoption of the Begin line when discussing President Ronald Reagan's Middle East proposals with American newsmen. This so much alarmed his supporters that party veteran Israel Galili was called in, to get Rabin to pay lip-service to the Reagan Plan.

SPEECHLESS SPOKESMEN. It seems strange that the Knesset's seven-man delegation to the Inter-parliamentary Union meetings in Rome includes only two English-speakers, particularly since another guest at the conference is none other than PLO chieftain Yasser Arafat. The only fluent English-speakers in the group are Labour's Moshe Shahal, head of the group, and Avraham Melamed of the NRP. The others — Eitan Livni, Amal Nasser e-Din and Yehuda Perach of the Likud, and Labourites Ra'anan Naim and Yehuda Hashai, certainly had a great deal of difficulty talking to their fellow delegates.

We understand that Shahal and Livni picked their parties' delegates. It's a shame such eloquent spokesmen as the Likud's Ehud Olmert and Eliahu Ben-Elissar, and Abba Eban, Chaim Herzog and Tamar Eshel of Labour, weren't included in the list.

BEFORE Labour's Danny Rosolio flew off this week to represent the Knesset at the European Parliament in Strasbourg, he warned that plans were afoot over there to cancel the annual November dialogue. Last year, European parliamentarians came to Jerusalem and MKs were due to have gone this year to Strasbourg for a return meeting.

PREMIER BEGIN has not heeded his advisers' counsel and is pressing ahead with plans for a Likud daily newspaper. I've been told he is not bothered by reminders that most of the heavy debt carried by the Tel Hai Fund were incurred by the defunct Gahal daily Hayom, so he has ordered Economics Minister Ya'acov Meridor to get the money together. They have $500,000 so far from party supporters abroad, but they need at least another $1.5 million to ensure its survival during the first year. Meanwhile, Meridor has handed the job of getting the project off the ground to advertising agent and Tel Aviv Liberal Party head David Admon. The Likud weekly Yoman Hashavua, whose editor-in-chief is Herut faction chairman Ronnie Milo, is likely to become the new daily's weekly supplement.

IT WAS ONE of the leading social events of the season — Yediot Aharonot publisher and editor-in-chief Noah Moses and his wife Paula, married daughter Judy to Amiram Nir, ex-TV reporter, aspiring Labour politician and lecturer at Tel Aviv University's Centre for Strategic Studies. The wedding, held around the Accadia pool, was deliberately low-key, both because of the war and the recent passing of Moses's brother, Alexander.

I have learned that Nir is going into the robot manufacturing business. He has formed a partnership with former police inspector-general Herzl Shafir for the production of robots for agriculture and industry. The money man behind the project is frock manufacturer Alfred Akirov. Their first project is a robot for picking citrus fruit.

A NEW INSTITUTION has taken root among the women of the diplomatic corps — a once-a-month Bible study circle. It was launched two years ago by Sallie Lewis, wife of U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis, and her mother, Mrs. Grace Smoot, with the active encouragement of Herzliya neighbour Yael Eiran, lecturer in Bible Studies at Bar-Ilan University and wife of Mivtahim general manager Amos Eiran, former director-general of Rabin's Prime Minister's Office. There are about a dozen members in the circle; occasionally they let the menfolk attend too.

LITTLE NOTICE was given this week to the gathering of the handful of survivors of the Second Aliya which met at Beit Berl to observe the 80th anniversary of that historic event. Histadrut Secretary-General Yeroham Meshel greeted the founding fathers, who included Saadia Ben-Oded, who came from Yemen in 1911 to found Rehovot's Sha'arayim quarter; Shimon Kushnir, who helped found Shechunat Borochov — today Givatayim; 95-year-old Nahum Hurwitz, a founder of Hashomer and Kibbutz Kfar Giladi; and Zvi Livne, a founder of the Histadrut and Moshav Nahalal.

WHEN I PAID a final visit to Tel Aviv Museum's monumental "Masters of Modern Art" exhibition before it closed last night, I tripped over TV cables and bumped into Haim Yavin filming the marvellous paintings by Van Gogh, Degas, Utrillo, etc., as part of a documentary linked to the museum's 50th anniversary. As museum spokesman Mooky Dagan helped the TV crew focus on the children's art workshop, I heard from museum director Marc Scheps of the exhibition's huge success, despite the war.

Cry for me

TELEREVIEW/Philip Gillon

MY SPIES tell me that Yaron London, armed with a sexologist, appropriate films and a team of actors, is doing sex-talk shows, which are all the rage in the best Israeli society. On these shows, people are encouraged to describe their problems, and are given appropriate counsel. I trust that he will soon bring them on to our TV screen, for the delectation of veteran voyeurs like myself.

In the meanwhile, he is providing us with much less piquant fare, but it is nevertheless very interesting. This week he brought us several Argentine immigrants to tell us about the country they had left behind them.

I found myself longing to know how the Argentine aliya had made out in this country. At one time it was fashionable to talk about good immigrations and bad immigrations: the Yemenite was a good one, but best of all, of course, was the South African.

London never bothered to ask his guests how they had fared in Israel, except to elicit some personal knowledge about them. He cannot be faulted for being indifferent to their destiny here: his show was billed as a programme about the Jewish community in Argentina.

London had read Jacobo Timerman and knew all the reasons to cry for Argentina: in fact, if anything, he had done his homework too well. He behaved rather like a student who has crammed for an oral examination, and who is so determined to parade his knowledge that he never allows his adjudicator to get a word in edgewise, and is therefore failed by the irritated examiner.

I was dying to hear what the guests had to say: London would ask a question, get a fraction of an answer, and then rush in to supply his own view of what the reply should have been. The guest would start to try to modify this interpretation, but London would rush on, as irresistible as Defence Minister Arik Sharon bringing peace to some foreign land, and taking a piece from it.

Naturally, since we all adore horrors, we were most fascinated by the young man who had been tortured by the authorities and had been imprisoned for several years. His name, I think, was Eduardo; he was introduced in the manner that is obligatory on Israel Television, a mumble and a jumble. Whatever his name, he was asked to describe in detail the tortures to which he was subjected, and we leant forward eagerly in our armchairs; a festival of sadism is not as good as a sex festival, but it's the next best thing.

Eduardo — let us call him that, even if it is not his name — was a disappointment. He told us that he had been badly beaten during the first three or four days, when the police were trying to get information out of him. He had been tied up, and, under pressure from London, he did throw in a mention of electric shocks. The Argentine authorities seem to have used the standard methods of conducting any interrogation in any civilized Western democracy. Eduardo's subsequent sufferings had been caused by complete isolation, lack of food, and lack of clothing.

In desperation, London asked if Eduardo had not been subjected to particularly fiendish tortures because he was a Jew as well as a leftist. Eduardo said that he had. So tell us all about it, please! Well, he was subjected to "more violence" than if he had not been a Jew. That was all. Not much for voyeurs of torture.

Most of the guests on the show insisted that they had not suffered to any appreciable extent from anti-Semitism. They shrugged it off as something that existed, but with which they could easily come to terms, provided they were not Leftists. Zionists, for example, enjoyed complete freedom to express their support for Israel. It sounded just like the U.S.

These guests went on to speculate that anti-Semitism might cease to be dormant if ever Argentina was plunged into an economic or political crisis. Up went London's remarkable eyebrows into his receding hairline. But surely, he opined, such crises exist now, after the disastrous war in the Falklands with Great Britain, and with inflation running at a rate that Israel can only hope to attain in another six months under the present regime.

The Argentines shrugged off these apparent catastrophes as minor matters.

Asked if they were urging other Argentines to come on aliya they were less than forthcoming — perhaps this was an indication that they are not as happily absorbed as I hope they are. One said, "I'm a Zionist for myself, not for others," and admitted that he had not written to his parents suggesting that they should immigrate to Israel. The impression I gathered was that an affluent life for Jews under a dictatorial regime may be preferable to freedom to suffer in our poor little country.

THE GUEST of honour on Ram Evron's show this week was Aluf (res.) Yosef Geva, the father of Aluf-Mishne Eli Geva, the armoured brigade commander who asked to be relieved of his command when West Beirut was besieged. Geva Senior was a guest of honour indeed: himself a former officer of high rank, he had come out to defend his son's honour against allegations made against him by Sharon in an interview with Italian journalist Oriana Falacci.

Sharon had said that many soldiers in the brigade had died because of Eli Geva's conduct. With considerable courtesy, Yosef Geva said that he had to correct this misstatement by the Minister of Defence. He did not believe that it was possible that his son's departure over a question of principle could have caused a single extra death.

In a very gentle voice he contended that the IDF is — and must remain — a completely, democratic instrument of the people. He claimed that an officer had every right — was in fact obliged — to question orders with which he disagreed. And he quoted such distinguished precedents for disobedience to orders as those afforded in previous battles by Aluf Arik Sharon and Aluf Yisrael Tal.

Evron, obviously playing devil's advocate rather than arguing something in which he himself believed, produced the cliche that an officer can debate an order, but, if he is overruled, he must obey it implicitly, whatever his views.

Now that Israel's far-flung empire is beginning to establish dominion over palm and pine, it is to be hoped that we will not descend into a Victorian concept of a soldier's duty. In the Fifties, in the Kafr Kassem case, our courts held that a soldier is obliged to disobey an inhumane order to kill Arab civilians.

THAMES TV'S The Norman Conquests has been lauded to the skies as a supreme example of the British skill in the making of television films. I am a great admirer of the British film-makers, but I must say that, as far as I am concerned, 1066 never happened, Harold and the English won the Battle of Hastings, Norman didn't conquer me.

I have seldom seen so poor and so dull a British comedy — I presume it was meant to be comic. Tom Conti acting the part of Tom Conti given a fat, salacious part to overact was embarrassing in the extreme: Richard Briers and Penelope Wilton were even worse. Only Penelope Keith kept her head when all about her were losing theirs, but it was in vain — she could not save the show from going down with the flag. The wearisome dialogue, the laboured humour and the crude direction were reminiscent of an amateur production of a daring play written by Somerset Maugham about the turn of the century.

As against this, Fair Stood the Wind for France did much to restore my belief that the British can make films with sensitivity and style. Both Cecile Paoli and David Beames act with such sincerity that they are completely convincing, and we live with them through a dark and terrible time, lit by the tenderness of love and compassion.

Ehud Ya'ari really put his reputation on the line on Tuesday night, when he told us already at nine o'clock that the fact that nothing had been heard from Bashir Jamayel for several hours signified that the situation was not good. At that stage radio reports were that Jemayel had escaped the bomb blast with light injuries. It was not the first time that Ya'ari has read a tragedy correctly.

Cards' Anduljar shuts out Phillies

NEW YORK (AP). — Joaquin Andujar pitched a three-hitter as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Philadelphia Phillies 8-0 on Wednesday night for the third shutout in the crucial three-game series between the National League East leaders.

The Cardinals, who got four runs batted in from George Hendrick, moved 1½ games ahead of the runners-up Phillies in the Division.

The Phillies' Steve Carlton blanked the Cardinals 2-0 on Monday night, while starter John Stuper and reliever Bruce Sutter combined to hold the Phillies scoreless 2-0 on Tuesday night.

Then it was the 29-year-old Andujar's turn. He boosted his record to 13-10, with his fifth shut-out this season.

While Andujar muted the Phillies' bats, the Cardinals put the game away in the third with a five-run rally off John Denny, who was making his first start for the Phillies since being acquired from Cleveland last Saturday.

Hendrick singled with the bases loaded to knock in two runs. Darrell Porter singled to knock in two more, and scored when George Vukovich let the ball roll through his legs to the right field wall for an error.

Elsewhere in the NL, Jody Davis belted a three-run homer and Keith Moreland and Leon Durham added solo shots as Chicago stopped Pittsburgh 7-2. Dickie Thon slammed a three-run double to propel Houston to a 5-4 victory over Atlanta. Andre Dawson belted a homer, leading off the 11th inning, to give Montreal a victory over New York.

In late NL action, Burt Hooton fired a three-hitter, Los Angeles' second successive shutout, and Pedro Guerrero slammed his 30th home run, leading the Dodgers to a 5-0 victory over San Diego.

Pinch-hitter Chili Davis cracked a two-run homer with one out in the eighth inning to lead the San Francisco Giants to a come-from-behind 5-4 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

In the American League, Roy Howell drove in three runs with a double and a single to lead Milwaukee to beat Detroit 5-3.

Cal Ripken Jr. rapped a two-run double to tie the score during Baltimore's six-run sixth inning and scored the go-ahead run on Eddie Murray's double as the Orioles defeated New York 8-5.

Vance Law's two-run triple keyed a five-run fourth as Chicago defeated California 8-3. Andre Thornton drove in three runs with a homer and a single, leading Cleveland to a 7-4 victory over Boston.

A pair of Oakland errors allowed two runs to score in the seventh, and Luis Leal scattered four hits in 7 and 2-3 innings as Toronto downed the A's 3-2 in the first game of a double-header. Dave Baker, atoning for three errors, singled home a run in the ninth to give the Blue Jays a 12-11 victory in the night-cap.

Gary Gaetti belted four hits and Lenny Faedo drove in three runs to power Minnesota to a 10-2 victory over Texas.

Steve Hammond lined a one-out, bases-loaded single off first baseman Jim Maler's glove in the 11th inning to carry the Kansas City Royals to 5-4 victory the Seattle Mariners.

Finnish bid to postpone Israeli congress fails

By JACK LEON
Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The annual congress of the International Workers Sports Committee (CSIT), will go ahead in Israel next week as scheduled, after member-nations unanimously rejected a call from Finland to either delay the meeting, or to transfer it to another venue because of the situation in Lebanon.

The call to delay the 11-nation congress came from Finland's Interior Minister Mati Hade, who is president of his country's Workers Sports Organization (TUL). Following their failure to get any support for their proposal, Finland announced yesterday that they would not attend the gathering, taking place at the Wingate Institute from September 20 to 23.

The meeting is being hosted by the Hapoel Sports Association, which is the only member of the Brussels-based CSIT not of Europe geographically.

Hapoel Secretary-General Yitzhak Ofek, who is on the CSIT Executive, told The Jerusalem Post yesterday that nearly 35 delegates from 10 countries will attend the congress, with Finland the only absentee. Nations represented together with Israel will be Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Ireland, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland and West Germany.

Among delegates already here for the event are CSIT President Maurice Deveen, of Belgium, and Rudolph Spiola, General-Secretary of the Austrian Workers Sports Association, ASKO.

Ofek reported that a major item on the congress agenda is next May's 12th International Hapoel Games here, at which the sports contested will include biennial CSIT championships in gymnastics, handball, tennis, volleyball and water polo.

Encouraging youth

By JACK LEON

TEL AVIV. — The Discount Bank is donating a total of IS400,000 to the Israel Tennis Association's Youth Committee this year, to encourage the development of the junior game.

The grant has enabled the ITA to award prize money at many of the 52 national and regional youth tournaments it is holding during 1982 at venues ranging from Kiryat Shmona to Arad. The winners do not, however, receive their prize money directly. Instead, it is invested for them in the bank, in accordance with International Tennis Federation rules appertaining to players under 18.

The Discount Bank initiated this special "tennis promotion" scheme last year. The ITA carries out its very ambitious youth training programme in close cooperation with the Ramat Hasharon-based Israel Tennis Centres.

Chinks in amateur status affirmed

ATHENS (AP). — Appearance money for track and field stars was approved recently for the first time by the International Amateur Athletic Federation (IAAF), but with reservations.

The new formula, a subject of controversy for the last two years, was passed by an overwhelming vote at the IAAF Congress here.

Sports

Boorish bears

LONDON (UPI). — Arsenal are to complain to UEFA about the way their players, officials and fans were treated in the USSR during and after the club's UEFA Cup match against Spartak Moscow, said British newspapers. Arsenal lost 3-2.

Arsenal contend that their fans were not escorted to the ground nor put together as UEFA rules dictate, that visas were held up in the Soviet Embassy in London, that hotels were switched without notice, and that club chairman Peter Hill-Wood was woken at 3 a.m. for questioning about payment of a bill.

"These people shouldn't be allowed to take part in European competitions until they show they are capable of observing the rules," Hill-Wood told the London Daily Mail.

He went on: "We don't need them. The western countries should stop going there until they learn to obey the rules."

Arsenal also say that they have been given no reliable information about Spartak's plans for their visit to London in two weeks.

Further results in European Cup Matches:
Champion's Cup: Juventus 4, Hvidovre of Denmark 1; Dynamo Bucharest 2, Dukla Prague1;
Cup Winners Cup: Inter-Milan 2, Slovan Bratislava of a Czechoslovakia 0; Lokomotiv Sofia, Paris St. Germain, 0; Lillestroem I Norway 0, Red Star Belgrade 4; IFK Gothenburg 1, Ujpest Dozsa of Budapest 1;
UEFA Cup: Roma 3, Ipswich 0; Ferencvaros Hungary 2, Atletico Bilbao 1.

Expensive star proving his worth

BARCELONA (Reuter). — Barcelona paid $8.3m. for Argentine World Cup soccer star Diego Maradona, the Barcelona daily El Periodico reported recently, citing official documents.

The paper reproduced a letter they said the Spanish Football Federation wrote to the Economy Ministry which says the club paid $2.3m. to Boca Juniors and $6m. to Argentinos, Maradona's previous clubs.

Earlier reports of the price tag, the biggest in football history, were of $7.7m.

El Periodico quoted team sources as saying the entire transaction could cost them up to $15m. because they will have to borrow on the international market in order to pay for the 21-year-old star.

Spain's Economy Ministry has forbidden Barcelona to export more than $650,000 a year in pesetas.

But on the field Maradona is very much proving his worth. He scored for Barcelona on Sunday for the second match in succession as his club defeated Valladoid 3-0 in the Spanish league.

PHILOSOPHY AND PAPAL POLITICS

By NATAN ROTENSTREICH

THE INVITATION extended by Pope John Paul II to the chairman of the PLO prompts one who is acquainted with the Pope's major philosophical work to take a second look at it, this time guided by the question whether a meeting at the Vatican with somebody directly responsible for many acts of terror and the human suffering resulting from such acts is consistent with the philosophical position expounded in that work.

To be sure, the book does not deal with terror in the context of human and inter-human relations. The title of the original Polish edition is Man and Action (1969), while the English translation bears the title The Acting Person. Since only the English version is available to us, we shall follow that edition. But we ask the question raised in the original, namely: What is the relation between a person and his acts? We apply that question to the moral standing of the PLO leader as a partner at a meeting with a philosopher who raised such a question about a person's moral quality.

Clearly, the book does not identify the person with moral deeds. Thus, according to the view that there is an existential dimension to human action (p. 152) and since an attempt is made to interpret the acting person as a whole (p. 263), even some sort of ontology of the person is presented. According to that ontology, being precedes action. Thus, the person and his value are prior to, and more fundamental than, his action. It is in action that the person manifests himself (p. 65). Could this distinction connote that the person encountered is taken in his primary status as a psychosomatic entity, allowing for the abstraction of his real status or an abstraction from what the person has made of himself in the process of what might be called self-formation?

SUCH ABSTRACTIONS would run counter to the impact of morality on the status and essence of the person as explicated in the book. Despite the tendency toward emphasizing the existential or ontological position of the person as such, it is stated that only the action — the agent is assumed to be a person — is of moral significance (p. 11). This statement indicates that the moral component comes within the scope of actions. Since that component is at stake, the notion of significance pari passu enters the contemplation. Moreover, the moral dimension, along with the antithesis of good and evil, becomes relevant in the context. Man experiences good and evil simply in himself, in his ego. Thereby he experiences himself as a person who is either good or evil. Thus we come to see the full dimension of morality within the subjective, personal reality (p. 49). Primacy is attributed to action as such. Because of the existential bias, morality becomes an essential attribute — to use that term — of action. As it says in the book:

"...Morality and acting differ essentially, but at the same time they are so strictly united with each other that morality has no real existence apart from human acting, apart from actions. Their essential separateness does not obscure their existential relationship. .. If it is in acting that man forms his own moral value — wherein is contained an element of the specifically human creativity — then this additionally confirms that man, the actor, himself shapes his acting and his actions... (p.70.)

"Our experience and also our intellectual apprehension of the person in and through his actions are derived in particular from the fact that actions have a moral value: they are morally good or morally bad. Morality consitutes their intrinsic feature and what may be viewed as their specific profile, which is not to be found in acting that assumes agents other than a person. Only the acting, in which the agent is assumed to be a person — we have stressed earlier that only such acting deserves to be called "action" — has moral significance." (p. 11.)

The outcome of this analysis is that: "Moral conduct partakes of the reality of human actions as expressing a specific type and line of becoming of the man-subject, the type of becoming that is most intrinsically related to his nature, and to the fact of his being a person." (p. 99.)

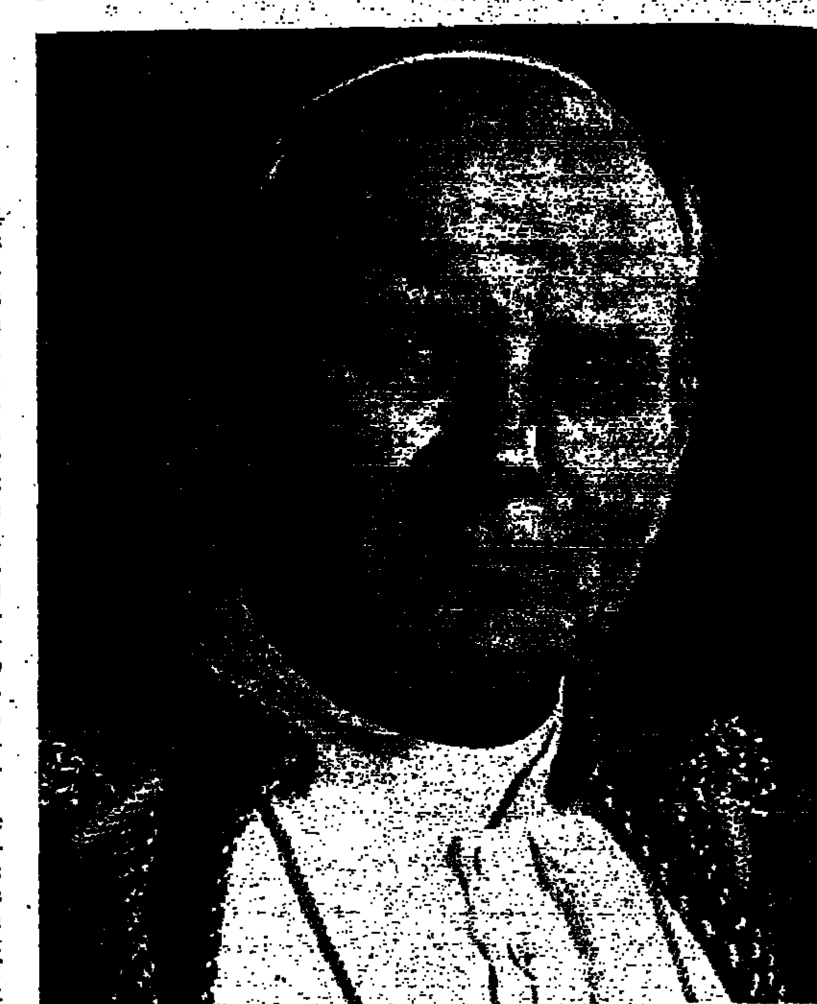
HENCE, though the actions follow from the very essence of the human being, he is, through a kind of feedback, shaped by his own actions. The primary position is moulded by the secondary actions:

"It is man's actions, his conscious acting, that make of him that and who he really is." (p. 98.)

Could we assume that the Pope now disregards his own analysis and is inclined to think that acts of terror do not shape the person behind them, though conscious actions make of man what he really is? Could we assume that terror is not listed among evil actions?

We shall see presently that this diametrically contradicts the philosophical position in the book which attributes significance to humaneness and love.

Again, before we move to that aspect, it may be appropriate to revert to the very position and impact of moral values on actions as such. It is said: "...while deliberately relying on the total experience of man, we can never avoid consideration of the experience of moral values...Moral values — good or evil — not only determine the inner quality of human actions, but they also never enter into a dynamic sequence of actions without leaving an imprint whereby man as a person; owing to his actions that may be good or may be evil, himself becomes either good or evil. Thus, assuming the dynamic or existential point of view, we may say that the person stands at the origin of moral values just as much as in their final outcome. In them the person emerges into view more completely than in "pure" action. Indeed, to detach human action from moral values seems an artificial operation that would turn our attention away from its full dynamism." (pp. 12-13.)



Pope John Paul II

WHAT WE described as the feedback of moral involvement eventually has its impact on the moulding of the person. In the first place, freedom has to be mentioned in the context, since freedom lies at the core of a person's self-reliance. Moral freedom constitutes the spiritiual dynamism of a person (pp. 154-5). Probably correlated with freedom are two additional components or aspects of the person: responsibility and conscience. Responsibility is described in the book as an interpersonal fact presupposing the dynamism of the will. Yet, in terms of responsibility, the notion of obligation comes in, which constitutes the mature form of responding to values. Responsibility bears within itself the element of obligatory reference to values (p. 170). Hence, what appeared first within the interpersonal framework is eventually internalized — if we may use that expression — by becoming conscience.

Once the moral values are brought in, the structure of the personality and the initial distinction between the person and his acts is sublated in the connection between the two, the concept of fulfilment appears to be the consummation of the process. The deepest significance with respect to the real existence of morality can be grasped as man's fulfilment. From the angle of man's allegiance to values, his allegiance to evil means in fact non-fulfilment (p. 153). There is no escaping the question about the relevance of these distinctions and their eventual synthesis, when a thinker meets a person whose allegiance to evil is apparent. Does he meet a person who has no apparent allegiance before the distinctions acquire relevance? Can any abstraction from the moral features of action (p. 152) be possible at all? This question is sharpened by a reference to — what might be called in traditional parlance — the material values, as distinct from the formal position of values as such.

THE WORK refers in the first place to humaneness, (the translation reads "humanness"). The man-person is not only capable of taking part in the life of a community. He is also capable of participating in the very humanity of others. The reference is to every man's humaneness. The ability to share in the humanness of every man is the very core of all participation and the condition of the personalistic value of all acting and existing "together with others" (italics in the original — pp. 294-5). It is a warranted suggestion to infer the relation between the notion of "humanness" and that of the common good whose superiority is claimed over partial or individual goods (p.283). It is not surprising to find in a book by a Christian philospher that the argumentation leads in a crescendo to the finale of the commandment of love. That commandment is the measure of the tasks and demands to be faced by all, that is to say all persons and communities. This is indispensable if the whole good comprised in the acting and "being together with others" is to become reality (pp. 298-9).

CAN WE HELP being perplexed and confused when reading these lines which are a resume of the systematic position presented by the cardinal who became pope? We cannot take the Socratic position, viz. that only a person who is unaware of the good can agree to meet somebody who is involved in a series of acts of evident evil. Can an author be unaware of his own work? What is the binding obligation of one's own philosophic position? Does the institutional status counterbalance one's philosophic convictions, pushing aside one's explicit philosophy, even if the philosopher is the head of a religion?

The perplexity of the reader and of the member of the world community exists. Once can only say to the addressee the Hebrew words: "Yelamdeinu!" Please teach us!

Help Save A Life!!

Plea for Aid

We appeal to our compassionate brethren to come to the aid of a Torah scholar who has worked hard for his livelihood thoroughout the years but is now confined to his home due to a difficult illness. Recently he suffered a total collapse, as a result of which he now finds himself in straitened economic circumstances, exaggerated by the staggering burden of debts which he has to bear due to the marrying off of his children. Hence our heartfelt appeal to all to come to his aid with appreciable contributions. This is a matter of saving a life.

All who perform this mitzva will surely be blessed and privileged with a year of redemption and salvation, and a ktiva vahatima tova.

Exuberant ending to old year

Tel Aviv Stock Exchange

By JOSEPH MORGENSTERN

TEL AVIV. — The equity market ended the old year on a euphoric note. It appeared that anything not firmly fastened down tended to rise — and in most cases the increases were of major proportions. Indicative of the high spirits were the final statistics, which made excellent reading: 17 issues were "buyers only," while another 75 were up by more than five per cent.

Ten per cent gainers were to be seen in nearly every sector. New issues continued to soar. Atlantic was a case in point as it zinged ahead by 51.2 per cent. Yizhar was an even better performer, as it was 85.6 per cent higher. Taking the laurels for the best performance of the day were the newly debuted Tagal shares, which soared by no less than 152.3 per cent.

The Israel Corporation shares were in strong demand, but holders of the shares were definitely not ready to give up any of them and the "buyers only" sign went up. Last but not least were the shares of Rogosin Industries, which were ahead by the "relatively modest" sum of 72.5 per cent.

The index-linked bond market was moderately active, with more than IS161m. changing hands. Prices were either stable or tended to advance by up to one per cent.

The shekel flexed its generally flabby muscles and gained 10 agorot vis-à-vis the dollar.

There was little to report from the commercial bank group. Danot 1.0 was a big winner as it jumped by 9.5 per cent.

Insurance issues were in fine form as prices advanced by good margins. Reinsurance 0.1 was a 10 per cent winner. Hadar 5.0 was up by 9.6 per cent, while Zion 5.0 was up by more than six per cent.

The shares of Lighterage 0.5 continue to be irrepressible. Yesterday they added on 3,600 points, for a 10 per cent rise. Teta 1.0 was up by 6.6 per cent, while the 5.0 shares were "buyers only."

Industrials ended the old year with a round of pyrotechnics that helped to move shares to higher levels. Elco 0.25 was "buyers only," but the B option was 11 per cent to the good. Ata B was 10.1 per cent higher, while the C shares were four per cent improved. Pollak 5.0 rose by 10 per cent, while Vitalgo 5.0 was advancing by 9.4 per cent.

Teva two days ago announced that it gave an option for its pregnancy testing system to a major pharmaceutical concern overseas. The registered shares responded with a 5.4 per cent gain. Lodzia 0.4 nearly recouped its recent loss by moving ahead by 9.4 per cent. Paper Mills, Maquette 0.1 and Petrochemicals all rose by 10 per cent.

Investment issues were a good feature, as Central Trade and Jordan were both 10 per cent gainers. Clal Israel was up by 8.2 per cent. Unico (b) rose by 9.3 per cent, while Incoba fell by a similar margin. Piryon was four per cent higher.

The oils were unanimously higher, with gains running up to nearly 17 per cent.

New York Stock Exchange

NEW YORK. — The stock market yesterday finished mixed in heavy trading after some profit-taking in the blue chip issues.

The Dow Jones Industrial average was off almost three points at the close after being up for most of the day. About 815 stocks rose and 730 fell.

Volume totalled almost 80 million shares, compared with 69,680,000 shares Wednesday.

Analysts attributed the decline in the Dow average to some modest profit-taking in the blue chip issues, but they continue to be bullish on stock prices over the near term. They said that after the almost 24-point gain in the average since last Friday some profit-taking was to be expected.

In, but then out

ISRAEL'S ARMY is now in the process of securing civil order in West Beirut. It is not a pleasing task, nor, as we enter the New Year, a pleasing circumstance.

Those who have been critical of the war can now argue that their warnings that Israel would become ensnared in the mire of Lebanon's domestic turmoil are being vindicated. Where that argument is not voiced merely for partisan political purpose it has merit.

But it does not exhaust merit. For Israel cannot simply abdicate from a mess it has helped create. That would be irresponsible and foolhardy. Until a new government is established in Lebanon, Israel, after the assassination of Bashir Jemayal, is the only force, besides Syria, capable of maintaining social order in Lebanon. It cannot resign from that responsibility for the sake of the Lebanese, who in such a vacuum would be plunged into interminable civil strife, or for its own sake vis-à-vis Syrian designs.

The order of business for Israel now is to prevent social chaos. That means uprooting the armed bands in West Beirut, including the PLO units deliberately left behind by Yasser Arafat as a base for the future, and preventing massive violent retribution by the Phalange for Jemayel's death. When that is accomplished, the army should withdraw from Beirut.

That should help set the stage for the election of a new president and a new government.

Once a government is established, negotiations, with the help of the U.S., must be pursued, and with energy, for the removal of the foreign forces in Lebanon, including Israel.

What Israel's order of business should not be is to settle in Lebanon waiting for a peace agreement. Such an aspiration was voiced by the defence minister. Presumably it is not government policy.

Even under these circumstances, Israel's forces will remain in Lebanon longer than anyone envisaged on June 6. That is the inner logic of this war because it was fought not against an army, but against a political condition deriving from the PLO's power base in Lebanon.

That logic is reversible. But only if Mr. Begin and the cabinet pursue vigorously and persistently the avenues of disengagement. It should be on the top of the list of the premier's New Year resolutions.

No New Year respite

THE NEW YEAR does not promise any respite on the economic front from inflation. In August the Consumer Price Index rose by 7.9 per cent, which brought the country's annual rate of inflation to 133 per cent.

This is not surprising. For several months now inflation has been roughly at the levels established in 1980, when Yigael Hurvitz was finance minister. Mr Hurvitz at least had the excuse of high oil prices. His successor, Yoram Aridor, the incumbent, has seen oil prices tumble, yet his much touted plan to overcome inflation with "proper economics" — mainly higher subsidies, arousing the expectation of lower prices — has come a cropper.

Mr. Aridor has therefore decided to launch still another economic programme. The elements of this one have a rather familiar ring: gradual reductions in subsidies, moderate rates of devaluation, and efforts to control wage increases. This recalls the programme which the late Yehoshua Rabinowitz tried to carry out while finance minister in the Rabin government, and which the Likud hastened to scrap only a few months after assuming office in 1977.

But of course there are some patent differences between the two programmes. Mr. Rabinowitz was tackling an inflation barely a third as high as Mr. Aridor's, and he was seeking to contain rises in gross wages, while Mr. Aridor is out to cut real wages. Moreover, Mr. Aridor is hoping to reduce the incomes of wage and salary earners without touching the incomes of other economic groups. He still eschews a meaningful capital gains tax on stock market operations.

Whatever this means in terms of social values, it is plain that it will not bring down inflation.

ANGRY U.S.

reporters by State Department spokesman John Hughes and White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes.

"This is contrary to assurances given to us by the Israelis both in Washington and in Israel," the statement added.

"We fully support the Lebanese government's call for the withdrawal of Israeli forces, which are in clear violation of the cease-fire understanding to which Israel is party," it said.

Speakes said the Israeli presence in West Beirut was "contrary to the peaceful resolution" of the Lebanese situation.

At the State Department news briefing, Hughes said the overnight change in U.S. tone regarding the Israeli move had followed confirmation that Israel's actions were considerably larger than had earlier been reported.

On Wednesday, both Hughes and Speakes refused to condemn Israel's drive into West Beirut, despite sharp questioning by reporters. They said the U.S. had accepted Israeli assurances that the assault was designed to secure only a few positions.

Asked to explain the overnight shift, Hughes said it had become apparent to Washington that the earlier Israeli assurances regarding the limited nature of the Israeli drive were not consistent with the on-the-ground situation.

The U.S. spokesmen refused to speculate about future possible American actions to remove the Israeli troops from West Beirut.

But yesterday's diplomatic and public protest was clearly the opening shot of what U.S. officials here anticipate will be a concerned U.S. drive to remove Israel from West Beirut. They expect yet another round of tensions between Washington and Jerusalem.

Israeli officials were bracing for a U.S. decision to support a new UN Security Council resolution condemning Israel.

What was especially irritating to U.S. officials was that Israel continued its widespread drive into West Beirut despite Shultz's direct appeal to Arens on Wednesday night to suspend the operation. The special U.S. envoy for Lebanon, Morris Draper, made a similar request earlier in the day in Jerusalem during meetings with Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Foreign Minnister Yitzhak Shamir.

"Quiet diplomacy just didn't work," one U.S. observer said, explaining why the administration decided to challenge Israel publicly. "They simply ignored our requests."

The Americans argued that the situation in Beirut had remained relatively calm even after Bashir Jemayel's assassination. There was no widespread fighting in the city, they insisted, until Israel opened its drive. Thus, Israel was largely blamed by U.S. officials for the latest round of fighting in the city.

THE MIST OF BATTLE

By ALLAN E. SHAPIRO

THE MIST of battle in Lebanon has obscured important developments in Israel's political life. A good deal has been going on while our attention has been otherwise occupied. We are used to the idea that sometimes events occur because the media are there to cover them. Others happen for the opposite reason — people are looking the other way.

In this category is the political muscle brought into the current working-over of the civil service. The process in the Labour Ministry of setting partisan and ethnic tests for public employment was already apparent before the war. Doing what comes naturally, Tami may also have encouraged a similar pattern for its senior coalition partner.

Project Renewal is a case in point. This lone achievement of Yigael Yadin and his Democratic Movement for Change in the first Begin government had been con*spicuously clean of* partisan meddling in appointments and appropriations. But the 900-odd jobs available are now being treated as a prize of war (not the one in Lebanon.)

Every Herut faction has its own machine. While Herut may have few generals, it has many condottiere — private power brokers — each with his own militia, based on the public agency he runs.

Political pressures through the Herut faction of Deputy Housing Minister Moshe Katzav have become common practice in Project Renewal. Professional criteria have been ignored in the decision-making process, along with the professionals.

Prof. Daniel Shimshoni, who conceived the original programme and can claim credit for its many achievements, including the clean way the agency has been managed, has tendered his resignation.

IF SHIMSHONI is indeed forced out or pushed aside, it will be felt in Project Renewal down to the local level. But the process is likely to spread to a host of other public agencies. Emphasizing the element of personal leadership, the war has not helped the power brokers within the party who lack the populist touch. They must make up for it in organizational zeal.

Deputy Premier David Levy wants it both ways. At the dedication ceremony at Ma'ale Adumim, he returned to his old practice of emulating Begin mannerisms, while pushing his personal political credentials for solving the housing problems of Israel's young families.

While the war has enhanced Begin's personal popularity, it does not appear to have strengthened the cohesiveness of the political movement he leads. Forget Lebanon. As long as there is no recognized political heir to Begin, the mist of battle will hang over the Herut central committee.

Nor has the war enhanced the political cohesiveness of the nation as a whole. Wars generally bring people closer together. This one drove them further apart.

Moreover, it has encouraged a suspicion of foreign intervention bordering on paranoia. The war's literal "mist of battle," the news blackout in the initial stages of the *fighting, was based on the assump*tion that foreign powers — America included — were hostile. It was designed to avert intervention. The Americans, not the PLO, were to be kept in the dark.

WHILE IT would be unrealistic to expect America to defer to this mood, it is unrealistic of the Americans to ignore it. Yet the American administration seems insensitive to the political implications. Why the pride in having initiated an internal debate in Israel over the Reagan proposals?

Does U.S. Secretary of Defence Caspar Weinberger think that he has helped his cause by pointing to Israeli support for the American plan? Has he made it easier for the Labour Alignment to call for negotiations based on the president's proposals? About the only thing he has not done is to call the Likud opponents of the plan, chakchakim.

Indeed, in today's political climate, it might be best if the Americans did not make any proposals, unless they were prepared to impose them. Israelis could conceivably submit to overwhelmingly superior force. Foreign persuasion would almost certainly be counter-productive. That is why Begin went to such pains to pin a "Made in USA" label to Labour's support for territorial compromise.

The Americans will have to become adept at seeing through our present clouded political atmosphere, darkened not only by the mist of battle but by the fog of a warm stream of commendable intentions meeting the iceberg of chauvinist ideology.

THAT FOG is likely to be with us for the immediate future. But the outlines of the coming national debate can be discerned. Begin is making the territorial issue into a matter of national self-identification; not a matter of national policy, but an article of faith.

Support for territorial compromise is not just wrong, it is illegitimate as well. And when it comes from abroad — The Washington Post, The New York Times, Anthony Lewis, Rabbi Hertzberg — it is sinister.

The Arlosoroff murder warmed up Begin for the Lebanese war and its aftermath. The historical significance of the case is that it put the Revisionists beyond the pale. They lost legitimacy as a movement. Hence, Ben-Gurion's "without Herut or the Communists" after independence.

Today, Begin seems to have set for himself the goal not just of defeating proposals for territorial compromise, but rather of placing the compromisers beyond the pale, lacking legitimacy according to the new Zionist orthodoxy.

No wonder the recent war did not bring us closer together. It really wasn't meant to.

REWRITING HISTORY

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — Who is Shoshana Klebanoff, and why was she allowed to air her absurd views across the entire back page of The Jerusalem Post of August 29?

If I want history lessons, I can read good history books, not selective drivel, be it by the Prime Minister or Ms. Klebanoff. Not content with rambling on about the American Civil War, she goes on to say that, "if it were not for Habib's mission, the PLO would have surrendered much earlier, saving many casualties." How does she know this? How is she so sure that Syria wouldn't have been more involved? How does she know the PLO wouldn't have continued to fight?

Apart from her hypothesis, or mine, for that matter, what we can say with certainty is that, without Habib, Israel could have invaded West Beirut, met with resistance and for sure both sides would have had high casualty figures, certainly higher than the present ones.

Ms. Klebanoff, Mr. Begin and Mr. Sharon can start rewriting history when truth and reason have been removed by force from our precious democracy.

POOR TASTE

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — I am appalled at the style of the wedding of Minister Sharir's daughter as reported by you. When Israel is mourning for its dead and suffering for its wounded, such a display of Hollywood opulence is vulgar and in very bad taste. The attendance of Prime Minister Menachem Begin and all communal leaders including those of the Aguda is to be strongly condemned. Surely at this time, the money could have been used for worthier causes.

How can Israel expect the Jews of the Gola to take its plight seriously when the leaders show such a lack of restraint?
